"That the Master should have been directed not to receive bonds, in lieu of cash, for any greater value than the dividend such bonds would be entitled to receive from the proceeds of sale. They should not have been directed to be received at their face value under the decree allowing the use of bonds as bid-money.

"That a trustee should have been ordered to bid for the property for the benefit of all the bondholders alike.

"That the time for participation by all the first-mortgage bondholders in the bond-bid should not have been limited to a shorter period than the time which is necessary to prosecute an appeal to the Supreme Court, so that the appellants might not, by exercising their right of appeal, lose even those equities secured to them by the decree, in order to provide for their unquestioned interests in the property.'

If no addition is now made to this assignment by introducing the subject of those coupons, a great amount of labor will be saved to the parties and the court; otherwise, as nearly as can be now anticipated, the matters to which attention must be given involve

(A.) The rights declared by the decree to belong to the holders of the coupons which matured in May or November, 1874.

(B.) The remedy by sale given to the first mortgage creditors, including bondholders and couponholders.

(C.) The provision authorizing the commissioners appointed to make the sale to receive bonds and coupons as cash.

(D.) The omission of the decree to limit, more stringently than it did, the right of Hays, Pierson & Dupuy to become purchasers of the property, or to deprive them of that right altogether.

(A) The rights declared by the Decree to belong to the Holders of the Coupons which matured in May or November, 1874.

The adjudication of the decree in this respect was (p. 1041, fol. 1525), that the mortgage of 1853 was a valid security for the bonds therein set forth, and the interest thereon, including the coupons which became due in May and November, 1874, represented as owned by Alexander Duncan.

The course of the litigation which resulted in this portion of the decree was as follows:

Duncan & Elliott, in their bill, which was filed May 25, 1875, (fol. 102), alleged that default occurred in the payment of the coupons of May 1st, and of those of November 1st, 1874.

The debtor, in its answer, raised no issue upon this averment, but admitted its truth (fol. 116).

A trustee of a subordinate mortgage, by direction of or stituents, The Rogers Locomotive and Machine Works, d‹ leged default (p. 73, fol. 137).

On March 6, 1866, (fol. 152), an interlocutory decree directing a master to ascertain the amount due on the r receive proof of claims; to entertain objections; to take p against claims; and to report to the court.

Under this order, Alexander Duncan produced coupons May and November, 1874, to the aggregate amount of $ asked to have them allowed (Vol. 2 p. 98 to 199 - fol. 158 to Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, afterwards, as assignees o Duncan, filed their claim upon the same coupons (Vol. 2. p. 9 Moran Brothers or Charles Moran availed themselves o by proving claims (Vol. 2. p. 84 to 97.

Cephise Chuffard, D'Orelli Ziegler, Rudolph Merian, H Bernard De Watteville, Masson Chavannes, Alfred Renevier Carrard proved no claims in their own names; but the cl by Moran in his name embraced the bonds and coupons l the last named parties (Depositions of the Messrs. Moran

Louis Belloni, Jr., proved six bonds (Vol. 2 P. 199. Q. 515).

He called upon Duncan & Elliott on November 10, 1876 object to the coupons of 1874. No other claimant made a Duncan & Elliott complied with this request (pp. 172, 173, 1

Belloni then made a specific statement of his objections pons (pp. 175, 176) in these words:

"First.—For that the said coupons of the first mortga bonds of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company were presen holders thereof on or about the first days of May and Nove at the usual and accustomed places where the coupons of the had been hitherto paid, and that the said coupons were then an to the parties so presenting them, and were surrendered by said the said coupons were received by the payers thereof, who l fore acted as agents of the said Mobile & Ohio Railroad C and about the payment of its coupons on its first mortga bonds. And the matters above recited in reference to sai transpired in the case of the coupons of the bonds held by t or; and no notice or claim was made at or before the time ment aforesaid of any purchase of said coupons by any one w and no such claim or notice came to this objector's knowled the same in any way called to his attention. But, on the co published notices in the newspapers, at the said times, annou the signature of Duncan, Sherman & Co., from whom the ab Alexander Duncan claims title, that the aforesaid coupons paid on presentation. And it was in pursuance of such noti ment that this objector presented his coupons and received thereof. And the said coupons, after said payment, became i as a claim against said company, or a lien upon any of its pro

"Second.—To the admission of said coupons by the master herein as a claim or lien upon or against the property of the said Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, or to a claim or lien of equal rank with the first mortgage sterling bonds, or to any report of said master in favor of the admission or validity of said coupons or claims, or secured by liens as aforesaid."

To these objections Alexander Duncan filed an answer as follows (p. 183):

"He, the said Alexander Duncan, was, at the time of the filing of the said detached coupons issued by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, which he has laid before the said special master, and of which he has made due proof, as is shown by the record of this reference, the true and legal owner and holder of said coupons, from thence has so continued, and still is the lawful holder and bearer of the same, and is lawfully entitled to payment thereof by said railroad company and of each of them, and that he is justly entitled, and insists, that the same be reported on this reference as due to him with the mortgage liens of the bonds to which they respectively appertain and with which they were issued; and he further saith, that he became the lawful holder of the same for full value paid by him for the same as his property; and he further says that said coupons have not been paid by the said Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company according to the tenor or effect of said coupons, nor either of them, nor any part of either of them, and he says that they, and each of them, stand in full force and effect as valid and lawful obligations of said company due to him, this respondent, with all the liens appertaining to the bonds of which they respectively formed part; and this defendant denies the allegations of the said contestant in this behalf to be true as alleged and set forth in the said petition."

The issues raised by these objections are the following. The objector alleged:

1. That the coupons of May and November, 1874, were presented at the usual and accustomed places where the coupons had been theretofore paid.

2. That the coupons were then and there paid to the parties so presenting them.

3. That they were surrendered by such parties and received by the payers thereof.

4. That these allegations applied to the coupons held by the objector, Belloni.

5. That at or before the time of such payment, no claim or notice

6. That published notices, in the newspapers, announced over the signature of Duncan, Sherman & Co., from whom Alexander Duncan claims title, that the coupons would be paid on presentation.

7. That it was in pursuance of such notice of payment that the objector presented his coupons and received payment thereof.

Moran Brothers filed objections to claims propounded before the master; but their objections did not apply to the coupons in question (pp. 176 to 181).

Upon the issues raised by the answer of the Trustee of the second mortgage, and by the objections of Belloni, and upon no other issues, proofs were taken in Mobile, New York and London, from December 5, 1876 to April 14, 1877 (pp. 185 to 806). During all this time neither Belloni nor Moran, nor any one whom Moran represented, was examined as a witness as to the coupons.

The master's report was in favor of the coupons (fols 324 to 327).

Exceptions was filed to his report upon that subject (pp. 813 to 817).

These exceptions were entitled and subscribed as having been taken on behalf of the Trustees of the second mortgage, and Belloni, and "Charles Moran and als. objecting creditors." Moran, however, had taken no objection to the coupons before the master.

During the pendency of these proceedings, Morris Ketchum became a litigant. He filed his bill on March 14th, 1876 (p. 838, fol. 1037). He claimed to be a Trustee of the first mortgage, but, not bringing suit on behalf of all who were or claimed to be, entitled to the benefit of that mortgage, he restricted his efforts to those who disputed the coupons of 1874, and opened war on Alexander Duncan, by an averment (p. 827, fol. 1017), that the latter's claims were fraudulent, and by an implied statement that the coupons had been paid "in the ordinary and accustomed manner in which said coupons had been theretofore paid" (p. 828, fol. 1019).

No issue of fact as to this charge had been joined upon this bill up to June, 1877.

On April 2d, 1877, Ziegler, DeWatteville, Chavannes and Jump, filed their bill (pp. 952 to 964). Their bonds had already been proved in the first suit in the names of Moran Brothers, but the members of the firm of Moran Brothers verified this Ziegler bill. The charge, in this bill, relating to the coupons in question was, that they were "paid and surrendered in great part on and after they became due, without notice being brought to the knowledge of most of the bondholders, that any claim was set up to purchase them" (fol. 1341). No issue had been joined on this bill up to June, 1877. Alexander Duncan was not made a party defendant to either the Ziegler or the Ketchum bill.

By an order made June 5th, 1877 (fol. 994), Merian, Renevier, Chuffard, and Carrard, whose claims had been already, in the names of Moran Brothers, proved in the Duncan & Elliott suit, were allowed to intervene as defendants in that suit and to answer. Their answer averred the payment of the coupons; that Alexander Duncan was estopped from claiming that they were not paid; that they were paid with funds and moneys provided by Duncan, Sherman & Co., in the usual manner, to the holders thereof, without any knowledge on their part that the same were not paid, and without any intention of selling the same, "at times when said" (W. B.) "Duncan was in full possession and control of all the income and assets of said company, and the same were pledged by the Board of Directors thereof to the payment of the interest upon said first mortgage bonds, and were placed in the hands of said Duncan, Sherman & Co., as such financial agents for that purpose, and were sufficient for that purpose."

On the same 5th day of June, the suit of Duncan & Elliott was consolidated by order with those of Ketchum and Ziegler, and by that order it was provided (fol. 1006), that all the proofs taken, orders made, and proceedings had in the Duncan & Elliott suit might be read on the hearing of the consolidated causes "in the same manner and with the same effect as if taken, made, and had, in all of said causes."

Thus the decretal order of March 6th, 1876, and the proceedings under it, including objections, proofs, exceptions, and omissions to except, were all translated to the two later suits.

Belloni has never appealed from the decree, nor have Moran Brothers, nor has Charles Moran.

The appellants, originally, were, Ketchum, Ziegler, de Watteville, Chavannes, Jump, Carrard, Chuffard, Renevier and Merian (p. 1044, fol. 1529). But on the 14th of January last, an order was made by this court as follows:

"Upon the petition of William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. Haskins DuPuy and William Butler Duncan, sworn to January 5th, 1878, and on motion of Mr. Merrick (counsel for the appellants, appearing and not opposing), it is, this 14th day of January, ordered by the court that this appeal, so far as it respects D'Orelli Ziegler and Bernard de Watteville, and so far as it respects the bonds formerly held by them, and so far as it respects the bonds formerly held by Cephise Chuffard, numbered respectively 953, 1208, 2215, 3491; 4054, 5193, 4194, 4195, 4196 and 5514 be, and the same is hereby discontinued; and that the names of the said Bernard de Watteville and D'Orelli Ziegler be stricken from the record as appellants on this appeal; and that a minute be made of record on this appeal, in this court, that said petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, have succeeded to the rights of the said Bernard de Watteville and D'Orelli Ziegler, respectively, as creditors under said mortgage, and to the rights of the said Cephise Chuffard, as a creditor under said mortgage upon the said ten bonds last hereinabove mentioned."

Since that order was made, the court has been applied to, on behalf of Henry Jump, by Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, the assignees of his nineteen bonds, for leave to discontinue his appeal. It appeared by the papers submitted on that application that he had instructed his correspondents, Messrs. Moran Brothers, as long ago as in September last, to transfer his bonds to Hays, Pierson and Dupuy. It is not his fault that, since then, the prosecution of the appeal has been continued in his name.

By these proceedings the number of the appellants has now been reduced to six, namely: Ketchum, Renevier, Merrian, Chavannes, Carrard, and Chuffard. The first one of these, Ketchum, is not a creditor. The amount of claims held by the last five, altogether, is forty-seven thousand dollars ($47,000). They are not jointly interested. Each has a separate interest, the largest $17,000, the smallest $5,000.

The propositions insisted upon on this branch of the case (A) by the appellees are, therefore:

I.—The appeal should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction and other reasons.

II.—If the appeal is not dismissed, then, on the merits, we contend that the decree was right in adjudging that the coupons of 1874 constituted a part of the mortgage debt.

I.

The Appeal should be dismissed for want of Jurisdiction and for other reasons.

So far as Renevier, Carrard, Chuffard, Chavannes, and Merian are concerned, this point was decided by the court in our favor in its opinion delivered on February 25 last. It is only necessary, in regard to those parties, to refer to that opinion.

But, in the same opinion, the court reserved the question whether Ketchum, as representing Moran, or somehow otherwise, might not be entitled to appeal. We therefore now contend that Ketchum has no standing as an appellant in right of Moran or otherwise, because—

1. Moran was a party to the suit, in his own name, in the court below, before decree, and needed no representative. If the other appellants, who proved their bonds in Moran's name, can appeal in their own names, surely Moran, who proved his own bonds in his own name, needs not the nom de guerre of Ketchum.

2. An appeal by Moran in his own name could not have been sustained, because, before the Master, he took no objections to the coupons.

   5 Wend., 673, Woods vs. Young.
   1 How., 169, Bell vs. Bruen.
   8 How., 402, West vs. Smith.
   18 How., 289, Kinsman vs. Parkhurst.
   20 How., 45, Hudgins vs. Kemp.

3. Moran would be prevented from questioning the validity of the coupons here, by any conduct of his in the court below, inconsistent with the theory of their invalidity; or by any other conduct on the faith of which another party acted, or by any conduct amounting to an estoppel.

   3 Otto, 39, Terry vs. Abraham.

Now, Moran did so conduct himself as to be estopped from questioning the validity of the coupons.

(a.) On May 4, 1875, he joined with other parties (p. 776, fol. 928), in requesting the Trustees under the mortgage to take possession of the mortgaged property. This request recited a default in the payment of interest four days previously. But Moran knew that a four days' default did not authorize the proceedings which he requested. By the terms of the mortgage (p. 52, end of first paragraph), possession was not to be taken except upon three months' default in payment of principal or interest. It was to Moran's interference and influence, therefore, that the beginning of the litigation was due. He knew in September, 1874, that the coupons were not expected to be paid. He then advised Mr. W. B. Duncan to be careful in purchasing them (see his deposition, fol. , p. , q. 282 to 288).

(b.) The Duncan and Elliott suit was founded on the theory that the coupons of 1874 were not paid. Moran availed himself of the benefit of that suit to prove his own claims, as did the appellants, except Ketchum. Duncan and Elliott having been appointed receivers in that suit, Moran on April 1, 1876 (p. 777, fol. 929, Ex. X 5), filed a written approval of such appointment, and a protest against their removal. This conduct estops him. See Vol. 2. p. 884 fol. 1128 to 1130 & p. 38

1 Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 204.
6 Benedict, 464, Cushing vs. Laird.
2 Woods, 323, Forbes vs. R. R. Co.
Id., 628, Anderson vs. R. R. Co.
13 Blatchford, 312, Stevens vs. R. R. Co.

4. Ketchum, as a trustee, has no right to appeal on behalf of one set of claimants under the mortgage against another set.

3 Otto, 412, Sage vs. R. R. Co.

II,

The decree was right in adjudging that the coupons of 1874 constituted a part of the mortgage debt.

Alexander Duncan produced these coupons uncancelled, and proved them before the Master. He thus entitled himself to the benefit of the presumption which attaches to the possession of negotiable paper hat he became the holder of them, for value, at their date, in the usual course of business, without notice of anything to impeach his title.

4 Otto, 753, Collins vs. Gilbert.

The contestant showed, it is true, that Alexander Duncan acquired the coupons after their maturity, from Duncan, Sherman & Co., but the only effect of that showing was to give Duncan, Sherman & Co. the benefit of the same presumption. It then became the duty of the court to apply the evidence to the allegations and determine whether the proofs sustained the defenses which the objectors had assumed the burden of establishing.

Those defenses emanated, in part, from Belloni, in part from Ketchum, in part from Chavannes, and in part from Carrard and his associates.

But Belloni has not appealed, and therefore it is unnecessary to examine his allegations.

Moran, if he had appealed, had made no allegations, and, therefore, there is no defense, of his interposing, to be examined.

Ketchum and Chavannes interposed the legal defense of payment, as that defense would be pleaded to an action of assumpsit.

Carrard and his associates interposed the defenses of payment and estoppel.

These two defenses, payment and estoppel, are the matters to be considered, and they are to be considered upon the understanding that the burden of proof is upon the objectors. The proponents of the coupons are not bound to prove a purchase. That is presumed; and the presumption is to be overthrown by proof.

1. The Plea of Payment.

If "payment" means, the appropriation, by a debtor, of his own funds directly to the use of a creditor, in discharge of a money debt, in consideration of the debt, and with intent to extinguish it, it is only necessary to say that there is an absolute dearth of any evidence to support this defence, so far as any original coupon holder is concerned.

No witness proved that any original coupon holder received any money from the company, or that the company delivered any money to any such coupon holder. The coupons were payable at the office of George Peabody & Co. in London (fols. 36, 42, 44). Not one witness proved presentation or payment there, or at any substituted place, or at the debtors' place of business. One or two witnesses (p. 195), testified to some payment in May, 1874, but they were contradicted Bull, Willoughby.)

It is contended, however, that certain transactions had by the company with Duncan, Sherman & Co., which firm, in the first instance, supplied the money to the original coupon holders, constituted payment to Duncan, Sherman & Co., after the latter had acquired the coupons.

These transactions were evidenced chiefly by entries, not upon the books of Duncan, Sherman & Co., but upon those of the railroad company (pp. 286 to 291). These entries, of course, did not constitute evidence against Alexander Duncan, nor against Hays, Pierson & Dupuy; but if they did, they do not prove payment to Duncan, Sherman & Co.

It is necessary to refer somewhat to the relations between that firm and the company in and prior to May and November 1874. What was their character in March, 1874, is indicated by a letter of March 5, 1874, (on pp. 651 and 652, fols. 802 and 803), from W. B. Duncan to the president of the company. It states the fact that the company was indebted to Mr. Duncan and others, some $200,000, advanced to pay interest due in November, 1873, and January and March, 1874. The company had agreed to repay these advances out of earnings, and any other resources at their disposal, (p. 314, No. 5). By telegram from New York to the company, at Mobile, on April 28, 1874, Duncan informed the company that the coupons due on May 1st would be purchased by his firm (p. 313, Nos. 1 and 2). Such coupons were purchased for Duncan, Sherman & Co., by the Bank of Mobile in Mobile, by the Union Bank of London in London, and by Duncan, Sherman & Co., in New York. Neither of these parties then had any funds of the company in hand. They intended to purchase, and not to pay or extinguish the coupons. The money expended in Mobile and London for the purchase of the coupons was repaid by Duncan, Sherman & Co., (p. 207, fol. 363, p. 312, p. 394, fol. 546, Exh. A, p. 392, p. 208.) In October, 1874, Duncan, Sherman & Co., in a letter which was put in evidence, (Exh. K. 9, pp. 418, 419), speak of these transactions as purchases.

In November, 1874, Duncan, Sherman & Co. purchased some of the coupons directly in New York, some through the Credit Foncier of London, and some through the Bank of Mobile (pp. 418, 419 to 452, pp. 379 to 381, Murdock's Deposition, p. 398, pp. 208, 209, 210). All this evidence shows that they did not mean to risk their money on the general credit of the company, but on the credit of the mortgage. See particularly p. 408, fol. 560, where Duncan, Sherman & Co. say to the Credit Foncier, as an inducement to purchase: " The security is unquestioned as " upon the demand of these coupons, the possession of the road can be entered " upon, if it should become necessary to adopt such a course."

These transactions were entered upon the books of Duncan, Sherman & Co., in an account called a "coupon purchase account' (pp. 325 to 339). The first item is dated April 28, 1874; the last in July, 1875. No receipts from the debtor are credited to the account.

The entries on the books of the railroad company, which, it is pretended, show receipts of money by Duncan, Sherman & Co., which should be construed as extinguishing the claim on the coupons, extend from April 30, 1874, to Jan. 5, 1875 (pp. 286 to 291). Treating them as evidence, they show that on April 30, 1874 (p. 286), the company was in debt to the firm $41,104.80. The total amount of the items credited by the company to Duncan, Sherman & Co., to December 31, 1874, was $901,208.18 (p. 288), while the total amount charged to Duncan, Sherman & Co., during the same period, is $852,517.00 (p. 291). There appears to have been no appropriation of money upon the coupons. Among the items credited to the firm on Dec. 31, 1874 (p. 288), are three demand notes, amounting together to $150,000. But by reference to p. 509, it will appear that this sum of $150,000 was the amount of a loan made by the firm to the company on Feb. 28, 1874, forming one item in an entire sum of $200,000 loaned by these parties to the company at that date, and charged to Duncan, Sherman & Co. by the railroad company as money received by the firm for the company.

Reference may also be made to Exhibit 1 to Wetton's testimony (pp. 277 to 285), for the purpose of showing that in 1874 interest coupons were paid to the amount of $157,970.70. This exhibit is an annual report published April 20, 1875. It constitutes no evidence against Alexander Duncan, or Hays, Pierson & Dupuy. But, assuming that it does, this item does not show that any interest was paid on mortgage after May 1, 1874. Interest on the Tennessee substitution mortgage matured in January, 1874, and on the second mortgage in March, 1874.

The observations of the learned Circuit Justice (fol. 1515, 1516, p. 1036) obviate the necessity of any further reply to the theory that the coupons bought in May and November, 1874, were paid by operation of law, contrary to the understanding of the parties, by the transactions between the company and Duncan, Sherman & Co.

2. The plea of Estoppel.

Estoppels must be mutual. There must be somebody to be estopped, and there must be some other body in whose favor the estoppel operates.

In this instance, the defence of estoppel emanates only from Meriam, Renevier, Carrard, and Chuffard, who are bondholders, now, to the amount of no more than $30,000.

They, by their answer (fol. 1001), designated Alexander Duncan, and Duncan, Sherman & Co., as the parties "estopped to claim that said interest is unpaid."

They do not designate the parties as against whom Alexander Duncan, and Duncan, Sherman & Co., are so estopped. That is left to be guessed at, or spelled out, from the proofs.

But the proofs will not enable the court to supply the hiatus in the answer.

If there is any estoppel, it must be in favor of some bondholder, and it must arise from the fact that Duncan, Sherman & Co., by their conduct, induced some bondholder to believe that the railroad company was, in May and November, 1874, paying its coupons, animo solvendi.

By this means, and not otherwise, the case might be brought within that of The Union Trust Company of New York vs. The Monticello and Port Jervis Railway Company, 63 N. Y., 311, which is a case on which the appellants rely. There, a stranger had furnished to the mortgagor, the means of paying interest, under an agreement with the debtor to which the creditor was not a party, that the coupons should be kept uncanceled, as continuing evidences of debt, for the security of the stranger. He was held by the court to be so estopped against claiming priority over, or equality with, those who supposed they were receiving payment.

To avail themselves of the principle stated in that case, Meriam, Renevier, Carrard and Chuffard should have shown that they had been misled by the conduct of Duncan, Sherman & Co. But this they utterly failed to show.

It would not do for them to show that some other bondholder had been so misled, because they could not avail themselves of the rights of such other bondholder in that respect. Those rights were personal, and might be waived, and were effectually waived, as is shown by the opinion of the learned Circuit justice (fol. 1520, p. 1039).

If the bondholders who were misled were those in whose name and behalf, to the extent of $3,931,000, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy filed a consent that the coupons might be allowed, and that they might have priority (pp. 1026 to 1033), then Meriam and his colleagues cannot reclaim the rights which those bondholders have abandoned.

If the witnesses who were examined in Mobile were misled, they alone can insist upon the estoppel which might ensue. But, non constat that they were bondholders at the time when suit was brought, or are so now. At all events, they have not pleaded any estoppel.

It was stated by the learned Circuit Justice in his opinion (fol. 1543), that, "in the administration by a Court of Equity of a common fund "subjected to the equal benefit of many creditors, if one creditor ob-"jects to the claim of another creditor, and succeeds in showing it to "be invalid, such claim does not stand good as against other creditors "who interpose no objection to it. The opposition of one enures to the "benefit of all." It is submitted that these remarks were intended to apply, and do apply, only to the defense of payment. They do not embrace the defense of estoppel.

Duncan, Sherman & Co. might have misled Charles Carrard, and so have subjected themselves to an estoppel in his favor, but it would not follow that they were estopped as against Rudolph Meriam, if he was not misled.

3. THE ARGUMENT OF THE APPELLANTS UPON THE SUBJECTS OF PAYMENT, PURCHASE AND ESTOPPEL.

Most of this argument answers itself. If the learned court will, in most instances, refer to the testimony cited, this will be obvious.

In other instances, however, some corrections and criticisms are necessary.

1. The attempt which was made at the Circuit to show that the railroad company, the debtor, directly supplied funds to the creditors holding coupons, seems to be abandoned.

2. The argument at Circuit, that Duncan, Sherman & Co. did not intend to purchase the coupons and keep them alive as secured debts, seems also to be abandoned ; as, indeed, it would have to be, in the face of the testimony.

See deposition of—

W. B. Duncan, pp. 308 to 317.
Mackintosh, pp. 317 to 320.
Walker, pp. 320 to 323.
Exhibits, pp. 325 to 339.
Hays, pp. 37 to 373.
Iselim, pp. 373 to 375.
Boomer, pp. 375 to 377.
Murdoch, 379 to 381.
Milford, 392 to 395.
Webster, 395 to 451.

3. The argument that Duncan, Sherman & Co., did not give notice of their intention to purchase, is reducible, again, into the plea of estoppel, and is based upon the theory that the holders of the coupons are bound to prove a purchase.

But, as above shown, that is an erroneous theory. The coupon holders start with the presumption that they are purchasers for value, and that presumption must be overthrown by the objector.

Want of notice of the intention to purchase is available only to those who plead and prove it. It amounts to, and is available as, an estoppel, but not otherwise. Now, not a single party who objects to the coupons, proves that he was misled, or that notice to him was lacking ; nor does he prove that anybody else was misled. If any bondholder was misled, it is his personal privilege to avail himself of it at his will. No one else can raise an outcry for him.

But notice was given.

On April 28th, 1874. Duncan telegraphed to the treasurer of the company : " Sterling coupons payable on face in London " only; therefore, will be PURCHASED by us here or at Mobile, for our " account, at $31.50, gold, and collected. OTHERWISE," (that is, if parties will not sell) " PARTIES CAN PRESENT IN LONDON AS AGREED ON COUPON. Certificate and interest forty dollar coupons are pay- able in Mobile when we telegraph funds are provided; would ask Bank of Mobile to buy them for our account, and draw on us for amount, sending coupons forward uncancelled. Does this meet approval" (p. 313, No. 1)

On the same day Duncan telegraphed to Walker, the President of the company: "Ask Pratt if his bank will, if instructed, "arrange to purchase for our account coupons presented in Mobile, "value on us, forwarding coupons uncancelled" (p. 313, No. 2).

On April 30th Duncan, Sherman & Co. telegraph to Pratt: "Please purchase for account of whom it may concern coupons, "maturing May 1st, paying sterling coupons not exceeding $32.50, "or $36.50, currency."

"Do better if you can, sending coupons uncancelled to us. Your drafts against same shall meet due honor" (p. 314, No. 3).

Mr. Pratt replied on the same day by telegraph: "Dispatch received. Will purchase May coupons and forward as directed." And, also on the same day, he gave a like assent, by mail, to the proposition (p. 207).

It may well be inquired whether, if the Bank of Mobile had failed to obtain reimbursement from Duncan, Sherman & Co. for the amount invested in the purchase of the coupons, that bank would have had to suffer the loss. It did not intend to pay the debt of the railroad company. It was the original purchaser. Duncan, Sherman & Co. acquired its rights.

Parties who presented coupons for payment at the Bank of Mobile did not receive payment. Their coupons were put in an envelope, and they were directed to go to the Bank of Mobile for their money. "This was different from the former mode "of collecting the interest" (foot of p. 248). It was equivalent to demand and refusal. If a creditor, at the request of a debtor, goes to a stranger, and obtains money, he must be presumed to have assented to the terms on which the stranger furnishes the money.

In New York, parties who presented coupons were informed that Duncan, Sherman & Co. were not paying them, but were purchasing them.

Boyd, p. 307.
Duncan, p. 311, q. 3.
Duncan, p. 315, q. 2.
Mackintosh, p. 470, q. 3.

On April 28th, 1874, Duncan telegraphed to the Union Bank of London: "Mobile Ohio coupons 1st May, pay for our ac- count, forwarding coupons uncancelled." p. , Ex. A.) The Union Bank had nothing to do with the railroad company. It advanced the money on account of Duncan, Sherman & Co., to whom alone it looked for reimbursement.

Here, again, it may be asked, if the Union Bank of London had failed to obtain reimbursement from Duncan, Sherman & Co., would that bank have had to suffer the loss. Would it not have stood in the place of the coupon holders, and do not Duncan, Sherman & Co., stand in its place?

No coupon holder claims to have been misled or deceived by the Union Bank of London.

On October 10, 1874, Duncan, Sherman & Co. wrote to the Credit Foncier of London, as stated on pp. 396 and 408.

See also telegrams, Nos. 4 and 5, on p. 314.

Notice of intention to purchase was publicly given by the Credit Foncier, p. 398, p. 418, Exhibit K, 9.

In October and November, 1874, the Bank of Mobile purchased the coupons then maturing, for Duncan, Sherman & Co.

(Pratt, pp. 208, 209, 210.)

Notice was publicly given that the company was not paying the coupons.

Hamilton, p. 249.
Willoughby, pp. 226, 232.
Bull, pp. 255, 256.

The testimony above referred to, relating to the purchase of coupons in New York, in May, 1874, applies to the purchases there in November, 1874.

Alexander Duncan and his assigns, as coupon holders, therefore sustain their claim upon:

1. Presumption of purchase.

2. Proof of intention to purchase.

3. Proof of notice of that intention.

Against this, there is nothing. There is not an atom of proof of dissent by coupon holders: nor of deception, fraud or any other circumstance constituting an estoppel.

The appellants still insist, however, that the transactions between the railroad company and Duncan, Sherman & Co., after May, 1874, have the effect of extinguishing the claim on the coupons.

They rely largely upon a resolution of the directors, passed April 28, 1874, pledging the net earnings of the company, after payment of the current expenses, to repayment of advances obtained by the President, W. B. Duncan, for the purpose of meeting the May interest.

Mr. Duncan was not at that time in Mobile. He was in New York, endavoring to induce various parties to unite with him in buying the coupons (pp. 371 to 380). He finally concluded that his own house of Duncan, Sherman & Co. would buy them, and he communicated that intention to the company at Mobile, as above shown. The intent of the resolution was, to protect parties who were expected to advance money to the company.

But no such advance was made. Mr. Duncan did not make the advance, nor did he accept, or act upon, the resolution.

Treating the accounts kept by the company as evidence, pp. 286 to 289, they show that from April 30, 1874, to December 31, 1874, the aggregate charge to the firm was $882,517. The payments of Duncan, Sherman & Co. during the same period were $921,590.15. There is no pretence that any of the money was embezzled, or that it was applied otherwise than lawfully to the use of the company. It was not in fact applied to the extinguishment of coupons, except some of the coupons of previous years. A large amount is for the current expenses mentioned in the resolution of April 28. Many of the items are not items of cash. Take, for instance, the item (on p. 286) May 30, where the firm is credited with $30,000 as for a note paid to Russell Sage. They are charged against this, on p. 290, with a renewal note to Russell Sage of $27,000. The total amount of notes credited to them as if paid by them is $287,682.61, but, on the other hand, the total amount charged to them against this, as renewed, is $352,072.65. There are many others of what are merely cross-entries.

Nothing more need be said in justification of these transactions than is said by the Circuit Court.

What is said in the appellants' brief respecting deposits in the Bank of Mobile is sufficiently answered by the brief itself, and by the proofs.

The bank kept a special "coupon account" to which it charged its purchases of coupons Ex. A, pp. 567. It credited to the account its drafts on Duncan, Sherman & Co. There was an intermediate balance on January 23, 1875, of $26,242.09, which the bank charged to the general account of Duncan, Sherman & Co. In the meantime, on November 13, 1875, it credited the account $45,885.85, which was transferred fromthe credit of Duncan, Sherman & Co.'s account. Mr. Pratt explains that this was an error which was corrected (pp. 564, 565, 566.)

(B.) The remedy by sale, given by the decree to the first mortgage creditors, including bondholders and coupon holders.

Duncan and Elliott, in their bill (p. 14), prayed a sale.

Ketchum, in his bill, prayed "that the said railroad, its appurte- " nances, rolling stock, lands, franchises, rights, credits, effects, and all " the lands of the said Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, conveyed by " said mortgage, be sold, and the proceeds of said sale distributed among " the holders of the said bonds, according to their respective rights," &c. (p. 831, fol. 1025).

Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs, in their bill, prayed (p. 963, fol. 1350) that the defendants might be " barred of all equity of redemption in and " to the said railroad, its equipment, appurtenances, and lands, rights, " credits, franchises, and effects, and that the same may, by such final " decree, be sold, and that such other final and decretal orders as may " be requisite to accomplish the objects of this bill and the preceding " prayers, may be made and granted by this court."

The order of consolidation recited that it appeared to the court, and in fact all parties united in making it appear to the court, that the three " suits were instituted for the common purpose of securing a sale of the " Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and other property of the Mobile and Ohio " Railroad Company, under the first mortgage thereof" (p. 821, fol. 1006.

The bonds, to collect which the suit was brought, were all payable in money (pp. 33, 34).

Under these circumstances, it is submitted that it is now too late for the appellants to object to a conversion of the property into money, by sale, and to a distribution of the proceeds, in money, among creditors. They have effectually committed themselves to that object.

Even in the court below they could not have objected to that remedy if any creditor asked it. Every bondholder had a separate personal right to disengage and separate his claim from that of the others, and enjoy it severally in money.

It was not competent for the court to appoint a trustee to buy land for the bondholders and to compel bondholders to take undivided interests in land in satisfaction of demands payable in money. Each bondholder was sui juris, and capable of taking care of himself. None asked for the appointment of any trustee or guardian. The terms of the bonds or mortgage conferred no right upon any creditor or upon the debtor to ask the court to appoint a trustee to buy land against the will of the creditor.

If a trustee were appointed to buy, who would fix the price he should bid? Who would pass the local laws necessary to enable him to exercise his functions? Who would determine the terms of his trust? Who would arrange the time-tables, the tariff of freights, the rates of fare; the wages of employees, the endless details of operating a railroad through four States, under four different jurisdictions? Who would guard the trustee, and the fund in his hands, and the beneficiaries, against the chances of four partition suits? If such suits were brought, would a new trustee be appointed by decree to purchase the premises afresh, or would the matter then have reached a stage which entitled the beneficiaries who desired it, to transmute their shares into money?

The objections to the appointment of a trustee apply with equal force to a strict foreclosure. Are all the beneficiaries capable of holding lands in all the States in question? Are they to be tenants in common? If so, how long is the tenancy to endure? What one is to be the bailiff for the remainder? Can the tenancy not be dissolved? If the legal title is to be vested in one, who is to designate or elect that one? Are the shares to be personalty or realty? How are they to be transmitted from one to the other? Do the laws of Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky, authorize the creation of an estate in land, to be held by an individual in trust for the purpose of operating a railroad?

Experience has demonstrated the impracticability of the device suggested. In the case of the Alabama and Chattanooga Railroad, I am informed that under the terms of the mortgage the court appointed a trustee to buy; but the scheme aborted, because of the refusal of bondholders to co-operate; and the beneficent intentions of the court were baffled, because it had made a decree which it could not enforce against the opposition, whether rational or irrational, of those on whose rights the decree was meant to bear. The road was finally sold for $300,000 cash, and the proceeds were insufficient to pay the Receiver's certificate.

In the case of the New York and Oswego Midland Railroad Company, in the Southern District of New York, the court put an upset-price of $2,000,000 on the property. It has been repeatedly offered for sale, but not a bid has been made, and the masters have ceased to advertise it.

In the State of New York, there is a statute authorizing mortgagees in trust, of railroads, to buy for their beneficiaries under a foreclosure decree. By virtue of that statute, The Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., as mortgagee of the New York and Boston Railroad, bought that road under a foreclosure, and issued its certificates to its bondholders as beneficiaries. Years have been spent in vain and costly attempts to harmonize the views of those beneficiaries. During that time the enterprise has rendered no private or public service. The property has gone, physically, to waste; and the franchise is about to expire.

These instances show the inutility of attempting to control the inherent laws of trade by the decree of a court, or even by an act of the Legislature. Nothing corporeal is exempt from the universal rule that the final test of its true value is furnished by a pecuniary standard, that is, a money measure.

(C.) The provision authorizing the Commissioners appointed to make the sale, to receive bonds and coupons as cash.

This is a qualified provision. It does not authorize the whole amount bid to be received in evidences of debt. The directions of the decree on the subject are these (p. 1042, paragraphs 6 and 7): After providing (fol. 1526, paragraph 6) that the Masters shall exact from the bidder $50,000 in money, for costs and expenses, and $100,000 in money or bonds on account of the debt, the direction is (paragraph 7, fol. 1527) that " the Masters may receive, from the highest and last bidder, bonds " and coupons which form a part of the first mortgage debt ascertained " to be due or owing by the Master in his report, and sustained by the " opinion of this court; provided, however, that a sum sufficient to pay the " costs, charges and expenses of the trust as above mentioned, whether exceed- " ing the said cash deposit or not, and also to provide for the payment of the " pro rata dividend which shall be due or owing to the owners of other bonds " and coupons secured under the deed of trust, must be paid in money."

This direction in no way injures or aggrieves the appellants.

They will either become purchasers of the property or they will not. If they do, they can use their bonds as cash, but must pay the shares of the appellees in money. If they do not, and if the appellants become purchasers, then the appellants must pay the shares of the appellees in money. Their legal right to money is fully protected and recognized.

A certified check is cash, according to the current meaning of that word. So is a sight draft, if current as cash. So is a bond which is entitled to an immediate dividend in money out of a trust fund.

The provision in question actually enhances the chances of a high price, by making a large amount of bonds available in the purchase. It is not the duty of the court to exclude all but persons of moderate means from the competition.

There is nothing novel or noxious in the provision in question. There probably never was a decree of foreclosure in this country which did not provide that the mortgagee might become the purchaser; and then the well understood practice is, for the master to exact enough money to pay the expenses, and to take the mortgagee's receipt for the difference.

If it is suggested that the provision in question gives an advantage to any one who may be the holder of a large amount of bonds, we respectfully submit our dissent from the suggestion. The advantage which a bondholder to a large amount has, existed before the decree, and independently of it. Being entitled to a larger share of the proceeds of the sale of the property, he has more purchasing power, because, as of right, he, as a creditor, is to take out of the money which the sale produces, a large proportion of the sum which, as a purchaser, he put in. When he invested in the bonds, he, in effect, paid up so much of the purchase money. This advantage the decree recognizes and protects, but does not confer. It is certainly not the office of a decree to deprive the large bondholders of this advantage A large proprietor would have the same advantage at a partition sale, or a sale of the assets of a partnership. A first mortgagee has that advantage over a second mortgagee. A judgment creditor has it over a judgment debtor. Partition suits, foreclosure suits, creditors' suits, are brought on the advantage, and to get the benefit of it. Is it the duty of a court to take it away?

The provision complained of and assigned as error, is a mere labor saving device. It relieves the purchaser from the necessity of paying in money with one hand, and taking it out with another. It does not involve any question of right, but only a question of method. The appellees could get along without it, as well as with it; because the purchaser who is at the same time a creditor, could probably, without a decree, waive the collection of the money by the master, and offset what he owes as a bidder against what is due him as a bondholder.

It should not be overlooked that the appellees have already $11,000 000 in the mortgaged property. If it is worth only $4,000,000, then every additional outlay exacted of them is a hardship. The appellants have invested $47,000. The hardship—or to use a word of very vague and indefinite meaning, the "inequitable" result—of subordinating the interests and lawful rights of the "majority," so called, to those of the "minority" so called, need not be dwelt upon. If sentiment is to control, and its dictates are to be embodied in decrees of foreclosure, then the sentiment of pity for those who have already invested $11,000,000 in property worth $4,000,000, should have as much influence as the sentiment of sympathy for those who have invested only ouly $47,000, of which they are likely to lose not more than $20,000.

The constituents of my immediate clients, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, do not necessarily belong to the class of "bloated bondholders." Some of them are widows; some are orphans; some are married women; some are infirm, or non compotes. Of some, the bonds they held were their reliance for their daily bread. Singly, they had not the power to cope with the Swiss bankers whom, three thousand miles off, Moran represents. They do not think that because they have united for economy's sake, and for mutual protection, they ought to be sacrificed to a litigious few. They doubt the correctness of the observation which, on a recent motion in this cause, fell from the lips of one of the learned advocates for the appellants, that "the court is counsel for the minority." If that were so, they would regret that they were under the ban of being in the majority, and were compelled to choose their counsel from the bar.

(D.) The omission of the decree to limit, more stringently than it did, the right of Hays, Pierson & Dupuy to become purchasers of the property, or to deprive them of that right altogether.

The decree directed (fol. 1529, p. 1042) "that if the mortgaged " property shall be bid off, directly or indirectly, by, for, or in behalf " of the bondholders and creditors who have or shall have entered " into and subscribed the agreement for the readjustment of the securi" ties of the said company, dated October 1, 1876, commonly called the " agreement of reorganization, then and in that case all and every bond" holder and creditor of said company, not having already entered into " and subscribed said agreement, who shall, on or before the first day " of September next, enter into and subscribe the same, and deposit " their securities with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in the " City of New York, or with the Bank of Mobile, in the City of Mobile, " as provided by said agreement, shall be, and they are hereby, allowed " to participate in said bid and purchase on the same terms, and on an " equal footing in all respects, according to the character of their claims " respectively, with the said bondholders and creditors who have hereto" fore entered into and signed said agreement."

It is assigned as error that bondholders who had not already signed the agreement here referred to, should not have been tied down to September 1, 1877, but should have been allowed until after an appeal to this court, or perhaps until after a sale, to claim its benefits.

The appellees contend that not only is there no legal or equitable rule or principle upon which Hays, Pierson & Dupuy could be subjected to the limitation upon their right of purchase proposed by the appellants, but there is none which justifies that which was actually imposed by the decree.

The ageerment in question appears in the record at pp. 340 to 369. It was introduced incidentally, in order to show in what character and upon what consideration Hays, Pierson & Dupuy had acquired the coupons. It was not produced for the purpose of having any adjudication upon the rights of the parties to it as against each other or as against the railroad company.

Upon examination it will be found by the court to be an agreement between the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company and its creditors for a composition, reduction and extension of all the indebtedness of the company. It contemplated a discontinuance of the foreclosure suits and a restoration of the mortgaged property to the company (foot of p. 341, and also p. 343) and provided for a foreclosure and sale only in case of necessity (p. 354, sixteenth paragraph). It embraced in its provisions and benefits the holders of the coupons of 1874, the Tennessee bondholders, the First and Second Mortgage bondholders, judgment creditors, unsecured creditors, stockholders, and the corporation itself. All the parties, except the corporation, made mutual concessions of what they regarded as their legal rights, in order to avoid the expense and delay of litigation and the loss of valuable immunities and privileges which might be consequent upon a sale.

But the appellants, under the lead of Charles Moran, steadfastly refused to compromise. They, in substance, declared that the holders of the coupons of 1874, and of the Tennessee bonds, should have nothing but what the law allowed them, and that at the end of the law. The evidence of this is also in the record (pp. 524 to 529, and deposition of Charles Moran, q). They, too, devised a scheme of purchase, but they wholly excluded from it the Tennessee bondholders, and the holders of the coupons of 1874, because they denied to those creditors the possession of any legal rights. The enormous volume of the litigation which they incited is now obvious to the court. Its expense and hardship to large classes of meritorious claimants are matters of fair inference. The recusants refused to compromise. They proved their claims in one suit, but instituted two others to establish the same claims. They rejected the bounty offered by the court in the decree below, and elected to rely on an appeal. They object to a co-appellant, who has tried since September last to disconnect himself from them, being allowed to withdraw from the contest. They are here now to contend for their legal rights; but they stand ready to claim a share of the legal rights which they have denied to others, if those denied rights are established against them.

This statement of the relative attitude of the parties induces the appellees to contend with confidence that that portion of the decree in question should not be modified. And they rely upon the following considerations:

1. To deny to the appellees the privilege of purchasing the property, unless they share it, when purchased, with the appellants, upon the terms stated in the agreement of October, 1876, would be to impose an unauthorized, unlawful and one-sided encumbrance upon the appellee's own personal property and estate, and to abridge unduly their personal privileges. They have hitherto held their bonds and coupons free from any trust in favor of the appellants. If they should convert them into money, or invest them in other land, no equity in favor of the appellants, as against the appellees, would attach to the proceeds or the investment. By what process can such an equity be made to attach especially to the property of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, when purchased by the appellees? Other property can be competed for and bought by the appellees the world over, free from the incubus of servitude to the appellants. How have the appellees come under any personal disability here?

2. No evidence was taken in the court below, upon the point whether it would be "equitable" or "inequitable" for the appellees to purchase the property for their own benefit. It not being supposed that that question could possibly arise, the proofs were not directed to its elucidation. Any judgment upon the point must, therefore, be the offspring of mere conjecture. But, incidentally, some matters have appeared which it may be proper to refer to. Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, or those whom they represent, have already invested $11,000,000 in the property. It is not worth half that amount. Whatever more money they have to pay, is money lost. Alexander Duncan's coupons cost him dollar for dollar. Moran's bonds may not have cost him forty cents on the dollar. Would it be "inequitable" for Mr. Duncan, having already diluted and divided his coupons under the agreement in question, so as to subject himself to a large loss, to question the justice of compelling him to make a further division with a party who, besides buying his bonds at a great discount, has put Mr. Duncan to enormous expense and delay in litigation?

3. The question should not be disposed of upon the theory that the appellants are poor and unable to bid for or buy the property. There is no evidence that they are so. The presumption ought to be, that Swiss bankers, as persistently litigious as they are, have money in plenty. The property is not worth more than $4,000,000, as both the schemes of purchase show. That is not a difficult sum to raise for the purpose of either buying or building a railroad. But if the appellants are poor (as they will not say they are), does that fact make the appellees trustees for them?

4. The question should not be disposed of upon the theory that the "minority" have rights of any higher degree than those which the "majority" possess. The latter are entitled to protection, no less than the former, in the enjoyment of legal rights.

5. The question should not be disposed of upon the theory that the appellees can defy or discourage competition. The lurking fear seems to be that competitors will not bid, because the resources of the appellees are so ample that they can surpass all others in their offers. If that is so, there should be an end of apprehension, for a high price is ensured. It cannot be the duty of the court to secure any particular purchaser or any particular price, but only to see that the sale is fairly conducted. This is done by the decree here (fol. 1526), where it directs that "the master will attend the sale in person and take care that it "be fairly and regularly conducted, and with proper regard to the "rights of all persons." It cannot be the duty of the court, either, to adopt measures to put the property within the reach of every person of moderate means, or, in other words, to cheapen the property. The duty which the court owes to every creditor is to see that he gets his own fair share of the proceeds or value of the property; but it is under no obligation to see that any creditor gets any share of the property of others. The court below can see that all are shielded from abuse and imposition, if that has occurred; and its orders can be reviewed here, if need be.

6. It would not be unfair to ask mutuality and reciprocity in imposing restrictions upon the right to purchase. If the court can justly limit the appellees, why should it not put the appellants under restraint also? Why not command them to surrender their bonds to Hays, Pierson & Dupuy to be used in the purchase? If we are their trustees, they are ours.

7. A coalition of creditors interested in a trust deed or mortgage does, it is true, increase the purchasing power of those who go into the coalition, or rather of the one who represents them, but it does not diminish the purchasing power of any one else. That remains as before. Therefore, such a coalition subtracts nothing from another's rights or property. It creates no injustice which the court must neutralize. If it is true that the small interest must raise more money for buying the share of the large interest than the large interest must raise in order to buy the share of the small one, that is a mathematical fact which existed before suit brought, and cannot be altered by a decree. The "minority" is the "minority" because it has already risked and invested in the enterprise less money than the "majority." The "majority" is the "majority" because it has already risked and invested in the enterprise more money than the "minority." Both come to court to get their own money, not to get each other's.

8. Should the court modify the decree in the particular complained of, it will pass into a rule of law that no two or more creditors, whether by bond, note, or judgment, who are secured by one instrument, can unite with each other for mutual protection, without turning themselves into trustees for everybody else who claims an interest. Later on, it will become an improvement upon this rule, that no party of capitalists can raise a fund to buy an incumbered railroad property, except for the benefit of creditors. Thus a new kind of equity of redemption will be created. It will be styled: "The small and perverse creditor's equity." The large and accommodating creditor can have no share in it. What will be the effect? Why, such associations will be under the ban. They will be discouraged. Every separate creditor will be left to the resources of his own unaided purchasing power. Then the separate and scattered competition of a hundred will be distanced by even the meagre purchasing power of a single one, if that is in excess of what any other one possesses. While no one else can overbid him, he cannot be compelled to go far before his purchasing power is exhausted,

The end of that will be cheap property, cheap sales, and poor results; while a combination of many is, as this case demonstrates, much at the mercy of a single dissentient. It can be driven into the high latitudes of bidding and competition as a horse may be the sport of a fly, or a ship the victim of a teredos.

9. If, after laborious consideration of the legal rights of the parties, it is competent for the court to compel a waiver, relinquishment, or partition of those rights, then it is respectfully submitted that the first and last question should be, not what those rights are, but what would be a fair compromise of conflicting claims; which being ascertained, the court has only to decree that the land be sold and the proceeds divided accordingly. That would save the trouble of examining anything but the agreement of October 1st, 1876. If that is affirmed, then clearly there should have been no appeal.

F. N. BANGS,
For Appellees.

Filed

April 22. 1858

Supreme Court of the United States.

No. 879.

Morris
~~MOSES~~ KETCHUM, Et. Al.

versus

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN, Et. Al.

Appeal from the Southern District of Alabama.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL,
Sol. for Trustees.

Clark & Hofeline, Book Printers, 112 Gravier St.

Supreme Court of the United States.

No. 879.

Morris
~~MOSES~~ KETCHUM, Et. Al.

versus

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN, Et. Al.

Appeal from the Southern District of Alabama.

STATEMENT OF PLEADINDGS.

The appellees, Duncan & Elliott, as only trustees of the first mortgage of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, of Mobile, Alabama, bearing upon its railroad franchises and property, dated 1st November, 1853, sued in chancery because of the defaults of that corporation to pay coupons of semi-annual interest, belonging to an issue of a series of first mortgage bonds, falling due in May and November, 1874, and demanded possession of the property. The Court granted possession, and appointed the trustees, receivers, in May, 1875. The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, the trustees of junior mortgages, appeared to the cause, admitted the defaults charged, the insolvency of the company, and the necessity for foreclosure and sale.

In March, 1876, the Court appointed a master to report the amount of the debt owing by the company, the priorities of the liens, the mode of sale and state of property, to prepare the cause for a hearing. The Master's reports were filed prior to the June term of the Circuit Court of 1877, and the cause was set down for a hearing at that term, and a motion for a decree submitted. Two other bills were filed after that order of reference, one by Morris Ketchum, who was persuaded to appear as a claimant for the office of trustee, and showed in his proceedings a keen appetite for the manipulation and exploitation of the trust property. So certain bond holders for the Continent of Europe, were in 1877 enlisted to assist him in his desire for the office. These suits were in an immature and languishing condition at the June term, 1877.

A consolidation order was made at that term, whereby the preparations in the suit of Duncan & Elliott were appropriated to all of the suits, and the issues raised were either postponed or introduced into the first suit.

Upon the hearing of the cause, the Master's reports were all confirmed without opposition, except in that portion which sanctioned the claim made by Alexander Duncan, for coupons purchased in 1874, and the rank in the order of priority of that claim. The appellants deny the validity of that claim, and Hayes, Pierson & Dupuy, trustees, assert its pre-eminence and priority.

Upon these opposite pretensions, the Circuit Court passed an adverse decree to each of them, and confirmed the Master's report, entitling them a place and a rank as a part of the debt due, without preference.

II.

ALEXANDER DUNCAN'S CLAIM.

The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, became embarrassed from losses sustained during the war. Peace found it with a dilapidated estate, arrearages of interest accumulated, and the railroad, and its material and equipment in a ruinous condition, held as captured property. The record contains evidence, of the increase of the debt by funding—of years of respite—and the resumption of payments in 1871, continuing for some three years, with a floating debt, ever urgent and pressing. In 1873, the year of commercial convulsion, the company borrowed from Duncan, Sherman & Co., money to pay the interest in November of that year. The depression which then commenced, is not yet removed from the country. In 1874, there was another demand upon Duncan, Sherman & Co., for advances to pay interest. The demand was exorbitant, and was not readily acceded to. The entire property of the corporation was burdened with mortgages and there had been no revival of confidence, business, or capacity to earn profits. The firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co., at the last moment determined to purchase the coupons falling due in May, 1874. The orders to their agents and to the company, bear date the last days of April. The testimony shows that Alexander Duncan was depended upon to supply the money, and that the purchase was made for his account. The parties were hopeful of a reviving trade, of increasing prosperity, and that there would be no danger of great loss.

The answer of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company admits there was an entire default on the part of the company to pay these instalments of interest; the books of account of that corporation on examination disclose no payments by the corporation of that debt; the executive officers of the corporation know of no payments or of moneys with which payments could have been made; the President, Vice President, and Directors are equally explicit and certain. The Bank of Mobile, the Credit Foncier, and Union Bank of London, who actually paid the money in Mobile and London for the coupons, as well as Duncan, Sherman & Co., prove that no moneys existed belonging to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, applicable or applied, in the purchase of those coupons of interest. The arrangements and the orders for the arrangements have been fully shown in the testimony of the parties who were in any manner concerned in making or in carrying them into effect.

The coupons of 1874, purchased for him, have never been in any possession but of the purchasing agents, Duncan, Sherman & Co., and Alexander Duncan, and were produced before the Master by Alexander Duncan, as the BEARER paying a full price to the owner for them with their own money for a title implied by the transfer and delivery to him.

No one holder of the coupons disposed of, has asserted a claim either for the coupons in the hands of Alexander Duncan, or as having a debt for it against the company. No one holder of coupons at that date has proposed to cancel the contract of purchase, and to restore the status quo by mutual restitution. No one holder of coupons of 1874 has put upon this record that he was deceived or duped into parting with his coupons to Alexander Duncan, and that for the deception he wishes the contract to be avoided. A very, very large proportion of the coupon holders frankly acknowledge the title of Alexander Duncan and his right to participate in the product of the sale of the trust estate.

The Master's report in favor of the claim of Alexander Duncan, is not excepted to by more than one person claiming that his coupons—the coupons he had in 1874—were paid to him by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company. The evidence to sustain the general allegation that payment had been made by the company consists of some persons who had coupons as principal or as agent who went with the crowd and received money and surrendered coupons, and thought that the company paid them, but they made no inquiry, took no note of what was being done, and being now informed make no claim for a rescission of the contract. These witnesses are few in number and generally do not now pretend to be holders of bonds.

There is testimony that information was at hand. No concealment was inculcated. Inquiries were promptly answered. A new agency, not that of the company, made the purchases. No purchaser disguised or disclaimed his purpose or position.

III.

The first mortgage provides for the issue of six thousand bonds, uniform in amount, date, place of payment, with like coupons for semi-annual interest, and designed alike to be negotiable by delivery from hand to hand. The mortgage bears upon the property of the company, so that each and every bond and coupon shall be secured in the same manner by every portion of the estate. These bonds and coupons constitute the debt to which the mortgage is the accessory, and to which the mortgage is inseparable. The holders of bonds and coupons, as holders, are the beneficiaries of the mortgage. The production of bonds or coupons entitles the holder to share in the trust estate. The possession and production is the only title shown on this record by any other holder beside Alexander Duncan. In addition, Alexander Duncan has proved that on the day these coupons became due, he, with the purpose to become the holder, paid for them the par value of the coupons, to the holder. It is proved the company did not contribute to buy or to pay for one of them. The law of Alabama sustains the right of the holder to share in the trust property without other title.

Duvall vs. McLoskey, 1 Ala. R., 708.
Emanuel vs. Hunt, 2 Ala., 190.
Cullum vs. Erwin, 4 Ala., 452.
Connor vs. Banks, 18 Ala., 400.

IV.

THE PLEA OF PAYMENT EXAMINED.

The statement of the evidence shows that Alexander Duncan has the possession of a title of higher grade than any other exhibited to the Court—a purchase made in good faith, for value. The acknowledgment of the debtor of the validity of the demand on the record, and in their own books. The plea of payment does not come from the debtor. Payment implies that money was delivered to the creditor for the purpose of performing the obligation of his contract, by the debtor, and the legal consequence is the extinguishment of that obligation.

"Solvere dicimus eum qui facit quod facere promisit."

Payment dissolves the tie (vinculum) which binds the debtor to the creditor. The creditor is thus satisfied, the debtor thus discharged. To accomplish the satisfaction and extinguishment of an obligation the same conditions are requisite as are needful to create it. The rational cooperation of the independent parties interested in the fulfillment of the obligation. The creditor and debtor must agree and assist. The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company has never experienced the sensation of relief from the burden of the coupons of 1874. They have never imagined that there had been a decrease in their debts by any act of Duncan, Sherman & Co., or of their own, relative to them. The civilians describe a "fraternal mandate" (so called) to a benevolent person to pay a debt of a necessitous and worthy debtor, without his knowledge, and they discuss the legal qualities of such an act.

But the Court cannot find the ghost of such a case in this record. The solicitations of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company for help in their calamity; the conditions, neither hard nor unusual, expressed in the telegrams of Duncan, Sherman & Co., to the Mobile & Ohio R. Co., the supplicant, and to the Bank of Mobile, and to the Credit Foncier and Union Bank of London, and to their own agents in New York, leave no matter for doubt that the purchase of the coupons was not made under a "fraternal mandate," but as a transaction of business. Both parties hoped the crisis was transient and the corporation might weather the storm; but Duncan, Sherman & Co., required all the security that circumstances allowed of, to induce them to do what manifestly appears now an act of great indiscretion.

The first act of ownership by that firm was to put the corporation in default, by demanding payment and receiving a refusal of payment. In none of the transaction of this purchase was there any agency of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Co.

Their officers at Mobile examined the coupons and merely certified them to be genuine. The Treasurer had no funds to pay with, and paid nothing; the purchases were made by the Bank of Mobile, agents of Duncan, Sherman & Co. Nor was there concealment. No evidence shows the company were concerned with the payment of a single coupon.

The bonds and mortgage are fitted for negotiation with perfect facility; they provide by their terms and by direct declaration that they are transferrable by endorsement or delivery. The bond is payable to bearer, the covenants of the mortgage are with the holder. The holder, in surrendering his titles to them, should enquire as to the person and the object of his delivery.

He cannot undertake to qualify the title of a holder by any imaginations, conclusions, assumptions, conjectures of his own. If he complains, he must show, error, suprise, artifice, fraud, conspiracy, by which he was circumvented and deceived, without negligence, supineness or credulity.

In this case there is nothing ef the sort shown. Alexander Duncan, with a complete legal title to the coupons, furnishes all the evidence the mortgage requires to entitle him to the benefit promised in its conditions.

The burden of proof rests upon those who challenge the claim thus supported.

THE CONTEST OF ALEXANDER DUNCAN'S CLAIM BEFORE THE MASTER.

There had been no contest of the claim of Alexander Duncan in the pleadings, in the cause of Duncan and Elliott. A bondholder, named Belloni, produced six bonds, as owner, to the Master. He filed an opposition to the allowance of the claim of Alexander Duncan.

It is the only specific statement of the ground of opposition made to the Master. The trustees of the second mortgage co-operated in the opposition, and their attorneys seconded Belloni.

Belloni claims that he had coupons due in May and November, 1874, he says, "that he presented them at " the usual and accustomed places where coupons had been " previously paid; that the coupons were paid to him, " and to those presenting similar coupons, and at that " place they were surrendered on payment to the same " persons who had performed the same agency for the " Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company previously, and at " all other payments; that he had no notice before the " payment was made, that there had been any purchase " made of the coupons, and that Duncan, Sherman & Co. " had published notices that payment would be made to " them on presentation of the coupons." This issue tendered by Belloni, for himself, and for any other coupon-holders of that year, presents a definite and intelligible issue. The material allegations that the Company, by its agents, had paid the coupons from their own funds or funds borrowed, is excluded from these allegations. There is a statement of certain facts to raise an inference, that the Company most probably had paid the coupons, or at least that Belloni had good reasons for a belief that such had been the fact, and so surrendered his coupons. But Belloni has not appeared to prove that he had coupons in 1874, and none of the details that are so circumstantially alleged, as to himself, has been proved at all. He might as well have stated that the Talmud represents Adam to have been a thousand cubits high, to have had two faces and a tail; and that Solomon measured sixty cubits across his shoulders; and that when the Messiah came there would be in Jerusalem one hundred and eighty thousand shops, for the sole purpose of selling perfumes.

This record abounds with allegations, as absolutely destitute of support, and made with the same oriental habit of parsimony in the use of truth. When Ketchum was examined, in the Spring of 1876, to ascertain whose representative he was, he would furnish no name but that of Belloni, and he was held up as a mighty creditor.

No other holder of coupons disposed of in 1874, has put before the Master his opposition to this claim and sustained his opposition by his own testimony. None have averred that there was error, surprise circumvention artifice in the mode of purchase and transfer, to Alexander Duncan, and that he disavows the transaction, and claims a restoration of the status quo. Were there any inattentive persons who did not comprehend the import of the transaction at the time, but were afterwards informed of what had been done, the probability is, that they would have congratulated themselves that the arrangement was made, and their only grief would be, there would be no repetition of it. We know of one person who, having sent to New York his coupons, the agent collecting them, in returning the money informed the owner that the coupons had been purchased and not paid, and warned him of the difference, and the owner only returned the expression of regret that there was no hope of a similar occurrence. No coupon of interest has been paid by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company since November, 1873.. Since November, 1873, no one has purchased the coupons of interest at their par value, except Duncan, Sherman & Co., for account of Alexander

Duncan Since 1874, the corporation has paid no coupons of interest, and their price in the market has been as low as thirty cents on the dollar. The persons receiving the money of Alexander Duncan are contented with their share in the transaction. The murmurers and complainers in no single instance have proved that they had coupons in 1874, and were misled or doceived, and demand a dissolution of the contract.

The parties who have made the objection that they did not understand the arrangement either have failed to make any proof or decline to make exception or appeal.

VI.

OBJECTIONS CONSIDERED.

The allegation of Belloni as to himself has no support, and as his testimony might have been taken, the conclusion is irresistible that it was not true. Other parties, as we have seen, have made no exception, and it does not appear that the witnesses examined have interest in this controversy or an interest to raise one. The appellants do not show that in 1874 they owned either bonds or coupons, or that they were concerned at all in the intercourse with Duncan, Sherman & Co., or Alexander Duncan. The proceedings seem to be those of persons who fish for eels: they must first muddy the waters before they can hope to take anything. A purchase of a commercial security involves a contract between the owner and the purchaser—there is agreement upon the price and an exchange of security for the price.

Here the price was paid for Alexander Duncan and the property came to his possession, as the price was paid.

We hear of no complaint from the several hundred of owners, who parted with their coupons and received the price. The record contains the names of more than a hundred who sold their coupons in London. Baring Bros. Lampson & Co., Brown, Shipley & Co., Morgan & Company are on the list. No opposition comes from any one of this list of persons. None has stultified himself by affirming that he did not understand the import of the transaction by which money was paid into his hands, and misunderstood what he was doing. Had any such person appeared and declared that without negligence or default on his part he had honestly believed there was a payment by the Company and not a purchase by Alexander Duncan, and the latter had been a party to his error, mistake or surprise, and had caused him damage, an intelligible case for consideration would have been presented to the Court, and the evidence taken as to such case would have interest. Belloni, who has been set up as the champion, has not asserted that such a case exists. He did not pray for the return of some coupons he had parted with, or propose to return the price. The case he made as to himself is a feigned case. He never proved even by his own affidavit that he had parted with a coupon in 1874. Nor have the appellants. The fact too appears that two or three coupons could have been and can now be bought for the price paid for one by Alexander Duncan in 1874.

Moran & Brothers are the sponsors of all of these appellants; without them, Belloni & Ketchun would stand alone. Moran & Brothers, in May 1875, as a bondholder, addressed Duncan & Elliott a letter requiring them to enter into possession of the railroad and property. They knew at that date of the purchase of these coupons by Duncan, Sherman & Co. They have never offered on their own part to rescind any contract of purchase. No assertion of surprise has been made as occurring at the date of their sale of the coupons if they were parties holding coupons.

In 1876 Ketchum filed his bill. He alleged in his bill that these coupons were not sold, but paid by the company. Moran Brothers in 1876, with "knowledge of both suits," denounced Ketchum to the Circuit Court as wholly unfit to be consulted about a receiver, and disaster would follow from accrediting him, and approved Duncan & Elliott as fit and proper persons.

Moran & Brothers proved bonds and coupons before the Master, but even they made no exception to the claim of Alexander Duncan, and have made no appeal save in the interposed names of persons having no knowledge of the transactions.

There is no proof of any instructions from Duncan, Sherman & Co. to do other than to purchase the coupons. Intelligent and competent agents were appointed to perform this work. The work was performed without any difficulty or dissent. There was no dissention among all the holders of coupons at the time, nor any till the appearance of Ketchum.

There has been none since that time, save only such as we have examined.

A clamorous dissent was made up pending this suit to foment a litigation, without a better foundation than clamor. But concede that there had been an absence of any notice, a purposed concealment, an absence of all intention by the bondholders at the time to sell coupons, and what them?

Littleton states the case of a feoffment in mortgage on condition to be void upon the payment by the feoffor of a sum of money at a stated time, without mention of the heir. He says, that notwithstanding the heir though not mentioned, may after the death of the feoffer, make the tender at the time, and if refused he may enter, for he has an interest. But if a stranger, in the name of the mortgagor, of his own head and without the privity or consent of the mortgagor tender the money, and the creditor accepteth it, this is a good satisfaction and the mortgagor or his heir may enter. Coke, in his comment, says they may refuse or ratify the act done in their name.

Co. Litt., Section 334, p. 206 a.

A payment of a debt by the debtor or by a stranger, in the name of the debtor, the debtor ratifying his act, produces an extinguishment of that debt, and all the parties to the mortgage may claim there has been such an extinguishment. But there are no arbitrary nor inflexible rules to determine what is payment or extinguishment. Whether a transaction be regarded as a payment and extinguishment, or be a transfer or assignment, depends upon the intention of the parties, the acts done, the relations subsisting and their duties. If the money be delivered by one whose duty by law or contract it is to pay the debt and cancel the security, or to perform and extinguish the obligation, the presumption would be that the delivery of the money was a payment. But when no obligation or duty rests upon the person delivering the money, or to discharge the obligation or duty, no such presumption arises, and the intentions of the parties, their relative interests and aims are considered and control. Brown vs. Lapham, 3 Cush., 551; Swift vs. Kramer, 13 Cal., 526; Worthy vs. Warner, 119 Mass., 550; Low vs. Blodgett, 1 Foster, 121; Matthews vs. Aikin, 1 Comst., 598; 5 Ird., Eq., 196.

The intervention of a stranger, with the consent of the debtor in the advancement of money to a creditor, is not an impertinent or intrusive interference, nor does such intervenor bring upon himself any discredit, nor dispose the tribunals to reprobate or to nullify his acts. On the contrary, the multiplied relations which arise in commercial intercourse, and their wide-spread ramifications continually call for such interposition, and the modern cases deal with the results upon liberal principles, and make a candid construction of acts and motives.

Jones vs. Broadhurst, 9 M. G. and S., 172, 198.
Sampson vs. Egerton, 18 Exch., 845.
Belshaw vs. Bush, 11 C. B., 191.
Cook vs. Lister, 13 C. B., 544.

In Lucas vs. Wilkinson, 1 H. & N., Ex. R., 418; M, a solicitor, persuaded his client A. to lend B. $200 on his bond; A. requiring the money, requested M. to collect it; M. had money of B. in his hands, but borrowed money from a bank, and deposited the bond as security, and paid A. this money. B. being sued for the use of the bank pleaded payment. The Court answered "that B. did not pay the bond. It was not his money. The money was not in his hands and he did not pay it."

In Walter vs. Jones, L. R., 6 Ex., 124, A. paid B. a debt of C.; but before C. had ratified the payment, B. returned the money to A.—C. pleaded payment on being sued. It was determined that when payment was not made by way of gift for the benefit of the debtor and a re-imbursement is expected, and he had no authority to make the payment, it was competent to rescind the payment ~~b[illegible]~~, and the ~~payment~~ debtor became liable.

In Adele Gernon vs. McCan, 23 La. Ann. Rep., 84, the Court decided that payment of a debt to be acquitted in money might be made by a stranger, but this must be the deliberate and intentional act of this person, for payment, is an act of will, and the performance of an obligation. When therefore it appears that a third person acted as an agent for the makers of notes who desired extension, and for a party who wished to purchase them as an investment, and consented to the extension; and this agent paid the money believing that he was purchasing the notes, and the extension was granted; held, that the transaction would not be considered a payment, because the person who received the money, believed that he had received payment. Nor could another conclusion be reasonably made. * * * Dodge vs. Freedman's Savings Bank, 3 Otto, 379. If there were conditions of surprise, error, artifice, accompanied with damage, the person suffering in consequence, and who had been guilty of no negligence, carelessness or supineness, might have redress. He might demand a rescission of the contract into which he had been betrayed. But all the elements for interposition are wanting in this case. The price paid for the coupons exceeded their value, and has uever been returned. The coupons were delivered to the agent of Alexander Duncan, and not to the treasurer of the company for cancellation; nor did the treasurer pay the money or ever have it in his hands. The facts have all been made known in proceedings in and out of Court, and the coupon holder has been silent on the subject of a rescission of the contract. An impeachable transaction ceases to be so, when the injured party deliberately declines to make any complaint after he has obtained information.

It is quite possible that there were uninquiring, heedless and inconsiderate persons who did not comprehend the transaction, and who thought nothing about it at the time. But then we have evidence on the record that a vast proportion have never complained of their part in the sales of 1874, and unconditionally confirm them.

Kerr on Mistake and Fraud, 48, 127, 298, 343.

Grymes vs. Sanders, III Otto, 55.

VII.

Commentators on the Code Napoleon state and discuss a case arising in the courts of France, which is pertinent to this inquiry. An officer (Huissier) charged with a process authorizing a demand upon a debtor for payment, and upon a default to seize property for its satisfaction, made the demand and was refused.

A stranger offered to make the payment to the officer provided he would subrogate him to the creditor's rights. The officer received the money and made the subrogation, which was confessedly beyond his competency. His authority was to collect money from the debtor or to seize his property under the process. The commentators agree that the solution of the case depended upon the conduct of the creditor, subsequently. If, when the facts were made known, he received or retained the money, the subrogee's title would be assured; but if he declined to receive it, or claimed to reject it, the nullity of the subrogation would be established.

Gauthier, denying the authority of the officer, says: "Nevertheless, in such a case, if the creditor ratifies subsequently, the subrogation made at the time of payment could not be annulled, and the effect of the ratification would retroact to the day of the contract. Ratihabitio pro mandato habetur.

Gauthier de Subrogation, § 104, bis,
Demolombe des contrats, t. 4, § 349, 350.
Larombiere des obligations, t. 3, p. 112.
McMillan vs. Gordan, 4 Ala. Rep., 716.

The principle has application to this case, upon a concession that there had been some error, surprise, misconception or artifice, without any want of diligence on the part of the party complaining. The testimony shows there was no damage to the coupon holders, and no wrong designed or inflicted on any party. Alexander Duncan is the only sufferer.

VIII.

The Roman law permitted a debtor to delegate to a stranger the power to pay his debt, and to be substituted with all of the rights and credits of the creditor. It is defended and explained as a beneficent equity in favor of the debtor, to enable him to ameliorate his condition by changing his creditor. He may have ease, favor, reduced interest, opportunities to use property to advantage, to exert fresh energy with a better credit. The creditor receives his debt from the stranger, and the stranger imposes no additional burden on the debtor. Pothier and Demolombe vindicate it as a generous and benignant concession of the law. The principle is expanded and the procedure regulated in the Continental Codes, and in this country the principle has been grafted upon the equity system with a recognition of its harmonious relations to the constitution of that system.

Demolombe. t. 4, 345, 389, 339.

Story Eq. Jur., §§ 635, 638, 640.

The solicitation of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, and the consent of Duncan, Sherman & Co., or Alexander Duncan, relieve the latter from a charge of being intermeddlers or gratuitous intruders. They interfered with authority.

The debtor having no means of payment, procures one to make the advances, and with the condition that there shall be no extinguishment of the debt. There is no performance of obligation by the company. The resources of the company are not diminished. All that the creditors relied on still belong to the debtor. There is no addition to the debts of the corporation.

IX.

PRIORITIES AMONG COUPON HOLDERS.

The decree of the Circuit Court relative to the priorities among coupon holders and bondholders, as framed, was moved for by the trustees, Duncan & Elliott. The mortgage was executed to secure the holders of an issue of bonds, all of which are alike. The trustees were empowered to take possession of the property whenever a default occurred in payment of any one of them. After entry, their action was to be equitable, that is equal to all concerned. A sale embraced all of the property with the franchise, and the proceeds were to be paid among the creditors, paying pincipal and interest due. In case of entire insolvency the word due in the deed signifies contracted to be paid. The Court of Chancery unfettered by any statute, as they said, promulgated the rule of the Court in liquidating the affairs of an insolvent corporation in the case of Humber Iron Works, L. R. 4 Chapp. p. 643.

The rule there adapted is in harmony with the decree in the Circuit Court, and we are not able to discover any incongruity between the rule and the judgments of this Court.

Dunham vs. Railway Co., 1 Wall. 254.
Gordello vs. Wegelin, 5 L. R., Ch. Divis. 287.
Olcott vs. Bynum, 17 Wall. 44.

X.

MORRIS KETCHUM'S TITLE AS TRUSTEE.

The position of Morris Ketchum, as an appellant, makes it proper for us to inquire whether he is entitled to be heard upon any matter affecting the rights of any party. It is quite apparent he was set up as a pretender by a factious minority, who proposed profit to themselves by whatever embarrassment they could make in the affairs of an orderly administration. The principal object was to to have appointments and trusts of administration of the property. The Court of Chancery of the State of Alabama, holding its sessions at Mobile, removed Ketchum from the place by final decree passed at April term, 1863. The bill shows that Palmer and Hallett died in or before 1860, leaving Ketchum as the survivor. There had been discontent and dissatisfaction between the company and himself, and he was charged with infidelity in the trust: of corruption in the performance of duty; neglect of duty; exorbitant demands for salary and absence from the State and the place where the duties were to be performed. There was, when the bill was filed, civil war, and he resided in a territory hostile to the State where his duty lay, and it was inaccessible to him. The deed of trust was executed in 1853, at Mobile, the domicil of the corporation and the place where its principal seat of business was, and the duties of Ketchum to be performed. At the date of the deed, the Court of Chancery of Alabama had cognizance of cases against non-residents when the object of the suit concerned an estate, lien or charge upon lands or the disposition thereof, or any interest in, title to, or incumbrance on personal property within the State of Alabama, or where the cause of action arose, or the act on which it was predicated, was to have been performed in that State. The Court had jurisdiction to remove and to appoint trustees, and the causes of removal described in the Code of 1852, which embody the law existing in statutes previously made, are the same as set forth in the bill filed against Ketchum, and the suit for his removal might be made by any party interested. Code of Alabama, (1852) Sections 2872, 2999.

The manner of citing non-residents had been determined by statutes and rules, and had been used for a long period. This manner was followed in this suit. A decree pao confesso was taken in 1853. The effect of such a decree is an admission of the allegations of the bill according to the Code, Section 2839. A bill of review might be filed within three years. In 1865, upon the adoption of the Constitution for the State of that year, under instructions from President Johnson the judgments and decrees rendered between, January 1861 and that date were ratified and confirmed as valid; but that any person should be entitled to a new trial who was not defended, if the failure to make defence was not owing to any fault on his part, and he had no attorney in Court when the judgment or decree was rendered. This time for applying for a re-hearing or new trial was extended by statutes passed in 1866, '67 and 1868, whereby the period for the application only expired in June, 1869, four years after the termination of hostilities. No application for a re-hearing was made by Ketchum. The trustees appointed in April, 1863, by the Court of Chancery, at Mobile, in place of Ketchum, possessed the office and performed the duties until 1875; and then Wm. Butler Duncan and A. Foster Elliott were appointed and were recognized by the corporation and bondholders, and were admitted into possession of the property upon the default of the company and demand of a portion of bondholders, (Moran & Brothers, being of this number,) and were charged with the powers and the obligations of receivers.

The property had been in their possession from May, 1875, as trustees and receivers, without a dispute of their title, until Ketchum was drawn forth, for the purpose of creating a litigation. He had not made his appearance as a claimant since the decree of the Court of Chancery had been rendered, or made any claim upon the company, the trustees, or the bondholders. The embarrassments of the corporation between 1866 and 1871, invited none of his attention. Nor did he perform any act in respect to the lands which were under the charge of trustees.

The decree of the Court of Chancery, in 1863, having been recognized as valid by two conventions of the State, and several legislatures, and full opportunity having been given to Ketchum to show cause against it, he is estopped to make any claim as a trustee. The Court of Chancery had plenary jurisdiction by statute to remove a trustee at the suit of any party interested for either of the causes specified in the bill, Code 1852, Ch. ix, p. 534.

The Court had jurisdiction to remove and to appoint trustees, and the causes for removal set forth in the bill are those embodied in the Code of 1852. Absence and removal from the State, neglect of duty, infidelity, as being unfit or untrustworthy. The manner of citing non-residents was adopted long prior to 1852, by publication and by written or printed communications sent by mail; Ketchum was cited according to rules which existed when he accepted the office under the deed executed in Mobile.

He submitted to the laws of Alabama as the condition on which he was to hold his office, and to the authority of the Courts to decree his removal. The orders of publication having been fulfilled, and no answer being filed, a decree pro confesso was taken. This under the statute law is a confession of the charges in the bill. In April, 1863, a final decree was passed by the Chancellor, removing him from the place, expressing as the cause that he was an enemy residing in New York. The same decree provided for the appointment of trustees, to fill the vacancies occasioned by death, as well as that produced by the removal of Ketchum, and the persons designated were confirmed in the office, and remained so until May, 1875, when Duncan & Elliott took their places upon a resignation.

Every department of the State government have united to deal with the judgments and decrees during that period as if there had been no revolutionary disturbances, and the State has afforded full opportunity to every person injured or who might suppose that he had been injured to have redress by due course of legal proceeding. The statutes of that State exhibit a clear conception of their rights and duties. The statutes determining the process of the Court of Chancery in respect to non-residents was drawn up from statutes which existed in Great Britain, and have generally spread through the older States of the Union. The jurisdiction is contrary to no article of the Constitution of the United States, nor to any provision of international law. Every person who connects himself with a State by becoming a party to such a contract submits himself to the jurisdiction of its Courts in matters pertaining to it. The sovereign powers of the State extend to all property, and all rights of property which depend upon its authority or fall within its territorial jurisdiction, not prohibited by the Constitution of the country.

The inquiry then arises does this statute bind Morris Ketchum in the matters embraced within the terms of the chancery suit and the chancery decree? Lord Chancellor Westbury, in Cookney vs. Anderson, 1 DeG. J. & S., 365, in commenting on statutes and orders in chancery in Great Britain, regulating procedure against non-residents in the Courts of Chancery—statutes and orders nearly identical with those of Alabama, says: "As international law in private rights, so far as it has been clearly established, is a part of municipal law, it follows that the law of a country which gives to its municipal tribunals authority to exercise jurisdiction as to persons and things which are beyond the confines of its territories, may also consistently with international law, be extended in certain cases to persons who are not natural born subjects. For when it is well settled by the comity of nations that any question of private right falls to be decided by the law of a particular country, it would seem reasonable that the Courts of the country should receive jurisdistion and the power of citing absent parties though residing in a foreign land. If therefore an action or suit be commenced in the courts of a particular country relating to a subject, which by this consent of nations is appropriated to the law of that country, it may be right in order to prevent a failure of justice, to give to such courts the power of exercising complete jurisdiction and therefore of citing absent parties under the penalty, if they fail to appear, of having judgment pronounced against them in their absence."

The extract we have made from this luminous opinion opens the inquiry as to the basis upon which the jurisdiction of Courts rests, as respects things in this State, and of persons in their connections with those things, anp secondly of persons independently of such relations. The learned Chancellor furnishes an answer. He proceeds to say: "there are therefore two grounds on which the legislature of any country is warranted in conferring on its tribunals an extra territorial jurisdiction. One the right which it possesses of binding universally by its laws the persons who owe it a natural allegiance; the other the right which it receives by international law—that is, from the consent of nations—of summoning all persons interested wherever resident when the subject of the suit arises, or is situate within its own territory, and falls to he determined by its own law, and the judgment of its own Courts of civil judicature."

The act of 4 and 5, of William IV, Ch. 82, allowed the service of process on any resident, in any place out of the kingdom in any suit concerning land, or any lien, encumbrance or charge thereon, or concerning any money vested in any government, or public stock, or shares in companies. Before this statute there was only a very restricted power in the Courts of Chancery, to bring an absentee before those courts. By the 7th and 10th of the consolidated orders, and the 37th order of 1845, the power of the Chancellor to convoke non-resident parties was not restricted to any class of cases. The power was given generally as circumstances required. In the case of Cookney vs. Anderson, the question was whether the consolidated orders, and the general order, authorized service in a case not falling within the Act of Parliament, before cited. The Chancellor holding the opinion that the orders exceeded the act, declined to grant the order of publication in that instance, because the subject matter of the suit was not one which could properly be brought before the court. "The origin of the right to sue, is a trust-deed, or contract, made in Scotland, in the Scotch form. The trusts of which, as well as the rights and liabilities it creates, must be ascertained and determined by the law of Scotland. The principal part of the property to which the deed relates, is real estate situate in Scotland, the right to which this suit determines."

The case before the Court of Alabama, is the converse of that before the Court of Chancery in Great Britain. The deed of trust submitted to the Alabama Court in 1862, was executed in Mobile. It was executed by a corporation domiciliated there, and the property, franchises, estate, rights of that corporation, were conveyed in that deed of trust. The conditions on which the trustee was to remain in office, are prescribed by the law of the State, and all non-residents accepting such a position is chargeable with notice of the conditions and the methods for enforcing them. It is apparent that the compilers of the Alabama Code of 1852, were advised of the statutes and orders we have referred to, and that they borrowed some of the language contained in them. The cases of Foley vs. Mallardet, and Samuel vs. Rogers, and Cohen vs. Alcon, in the same volume of the reports, contain orders and arguments, relating to the practice in chancery under the act of parliament. The limitation imposed upon the orders in chancery, by Lord Westbury, did not meet with the sanction of his successor and the other judges in chancery, and they were maintained in all their extent after a very careful examination by Lord Chan. Chelmsford, in Drummond vs. Drummond, 2 Ch. App. 32. It appears from the opinions delivered in the last case, that the orders were made by Lord Lyndhurst, aided by the master of the rolls, (Langdale,) vice-chancellor (Wigram,) and two solicitors, both of whom afterwards became members of the Chancery bench.

The conclusion results from this opinion that the exercise of jurisdiction in the case of the Mobile and Ohio Rail Road Company, by the Court of Chancery in Mobile, in 1862, was legitimate and authoritative.

It may throw some light upon the subject, to ascertain whether the jurisdiction over the citizens of a State, though absentees, and over persons who have been or are sojourners within the State, or have contracted there, can properly be brought into court by a constructive service

In Schillsby vs. Westenholtz, L. Q. 6 Q. B., 155, the question arose whether a suit could be maintained upon a personal judgment rendered in a Court in France, against defendants who were not citizens or residents of that country, and had not made the contract and had no property there. Justice Blackburn said: "We think some things are quite clear on principle. If the defendants had been, at the time of the judgment, subjects of the country whose judgment is sought to be enforced against them, we think its laws would have bound them. Again, if the defendants had been, at the time when the suit was commenced, resident in the country so as to have had the benefit of the laws protecting them, or, as it is sometimes expressed, owing temporary allegiance to that country, we think the laws would have bound them. If, at the time when the obligation was contracted, the defendants were in the foreign country but left it before the suit was instituted, we should be inclined to think the laws of that country bound them, though before finally deciding this we should like to hear the question argued."

This opinion was followed in Capin vs. Adamson, L. Rep., 9 Exch., 345, where a judgment in France was enforced in England, though the defendant did not reside in France, and had no knowledge of the suit; the notice being served upon him as a member of a company, and the law prescribing a mode of service upon all such persons in a particular manner. This judgment was affirmed in the House of Lords.

The same principle is maintained in the Courts of Massachusetts.

Henderson vs. Standeford, 105 Mass., 508.

11 Cush., 277; 13 Gray, 51.

The Congress of the United States in adopting a procedure for confiscation cases, and the sanction which that procedure has received from the judicial tribunals, fully establish the legitimacy of the claim we make for the Alabama Courts. If confiscation had been a matter of mere municipal regulation, and had been treated as a punitive measure, the Constitution of the United States would have been violated by the judgments rendered in those cases. The Constitution regulates criminol procedure in the particular that the accused must have notice and power to appear in court. But the Supreme Court answered the objection by affirming that the United States had a power to confiscate, and that the mode of doing so is and was within the competency of Congress for determination without any restraint from any Article in the federal Constitution.

The Supreme Court of the United States has not in any case disregarded or set aside decrees or judgments of State Courts which were rendered in accordance with State laws, regulating procedure. In some of the cases which have had the recognition of the Court, the execution was the first process issued under the Statute.

Bank of Columbia vs. Okely, 4 W. 235;
Murray vs. Hoboken, 18 H., 272;
Livingston vs. Moore, 7 P., 552.

In this cause the objection is made by the trustees of the second mortgage, that the decree of the Court of Chancery is inoperative. Ketchum, the defendant in that decree, has no connection with the trustees in that mortgage. He is not their servant nor their principal. The decree of the Court has been executed, and other trustees, for the period of thirteen years, have been officiating without opposition from them.

The corporation and the bondholders who are parties to the deed, have not made the objection. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts say: Many considerations favor the rule that judgments of a court of competent jurisdiction which are erroneous by reason of a defect of process or insufficiency of service, can be impeached by parties thereto only by proceedings instituted directly for that purpose.

The plaintiff is concluded by such judgment. He cannot treat it as a nullity and proceed again upon his original demand as if no such judgment had been rendered.

Hendrick vs. Whittemore, 105 Mass., 23.

The defendant and those in privity with him, are the only persons interested in the decree, and these have all submitted to the decree.

2 Met. 135; 105 Mass., 504.

On the face of the decree it is operative. It is rendered in conformity with law and in a case within the jurisdiction of the Court. The decree is executed by transmutation of possession of property. In such conditions there is no title in the defendants who claim independently of the deed and of the defendant in the suit, to inquire into the validity of the decree.

Starbuck vs. Murray, 5 Wend., 148;

Harvey vs. Tyler, 2 Wall., 329.

The decree vests the estate in the appointees of the Court in the same mauner and with the same effect as if they had been originally appointed by the company, and the transactions of the corporation in so far as they are dependent upon the trustees appointed under the decree, have been carried on without opposition from any person whomsoever.

The exposition of the imbecility, feebleness and want of integrity in the pretensions of Ketchum is necessary to a just appreciation of the nature of the appeal. The conspicuous feature in the oppositions, is that they are superinduced for the mere purpose of fomenting litigation. That this has been done with no serious or sincere purpose to have justice administered or truth vindicated, but that the persons concerned might in some manner or another make themselves sufficiently troublesome to be paid off. The purpose has been to extort.

Heretofore, they have not been successful, and we confidently believe that their defeat will take place in this Court.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL,
Sol. for Trustees.

Peter Hamilton
Sol for trustees

U. S. Supreme Court.

WILLIAM H. HAYS AND OTHERS,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

BRIEF FOR APPELLANTS.

F. N. BANGS,
For Appellants.

NEW YORK:
EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 BROADWAY, COR. FULTON ST.

1878.

In the Supreme Court

OF THE UNITED STATES.

William H. Hays et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
William Butler Duncan et al.,
Appellees.

The Circuit Court, by its final decree in the consolidated suit, put the overdue and detached coupons of 1874, upon a footing of equality with the principal of the bonds. It decreed that these coupons still constituted a part of the mortgage debt, and were entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property; but in no respect gave them any advantage over subsequently maturing coupons, or over the bonds, in the distribution of either the income which had accrued pending the suit, or of the fund which should arise from the sale of the security.

These particulars of the decree are sought to be reviewed on this appeal, which is taken by Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, the holders of the coupons in question. Their appeal necessarily assumes the correctness of the decree, so far as it establishes the continued existence and lien of the coupons; and it is presumed that the question, arising on this appeal, of the order and mode of payment of the coupons, will not be reached until after the cross appeal shall have been argued. It is therefore unnecessary to consider, here, the grounds on which the right of the coupon holders to be treated as creditors at all, depends. That question will already have been discussed on the cross appeal.

The Appellants, Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, make the following

Assignment of Errors.

1. The Circuit Court erred in not decreeing that the railroad company, the debtor, was entitled to redeem, within a time to be fixed by the court, upon paying the interest in arrear, with the costs and expenses of suit; and in not decreeing that the Receivers should aid the debtor in effecting such redemption by applying towards the overdue interest and expenses, the fund which had accumulated in their hands from the use of the property pending the suit.

2. The court erred in not directing that the income of the property which had accrued in the hands of the Receiver, pending the litigation, should be applied, after payment of expenses of suit, to the discharge of the interest coupons in arrear, in the order in which such coupons matured.

3. The court erred in not decreeing that the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property, in case a sale should be necessary, should be, in the first instance, applied to the payment of the interest coupons in the order of their maturity, down to the time of the decree, before being distributed upon the principal of the debt.

4. The court erred in not decreeing that the coupon holders were entitled to a decree not only that the coupons were a lien on the mortgaged property for their full amount, but that they were the first lien to be provided for next after the payment of the expenses of the suit, and that the master, after payment of the expenses of the suit and of the sale, should divide the net proceeds of the sale rateably among the coupon holders, according to the order in which the successive series matured, until each maturity of coupons should be fully paid, with interest, before making any payment or dividend on account of the principal of any of the bonds; that he should divide the residue of the proceeds rateably upon the bonds until they should be fully paid, and that he should receive the coupons of any series or date of maturity in payment of the amount bid, as far as such coupons and interest thereon would go, as equivalent to the money which such coupons would be entitled to receive out of the proceeds of the sale; and that after retaining from the proceeds of sale enough to pay and satisfy in full, with interest, such coupons as had matured prior to the date of the decree, and as should not have been turned in to him as equivalent to money, he should receive, on account of the bid, any outstanding first mortgage or first mortgage interest bond, as equivalent to the amount of money which such bond would be entitled to receive by way of dividend out of the proceeds of sale.

The Facts

bearing upon the questions involved in the assignment of errors are the following:

1. There had accumulated, pending the suit, in the hands of the Receivers, the sum of \$394,915$\frac{50}{100}$. (See their quarterly report for April, 1877, p. 297, Vol. 2, fol. 850.) This was the fund to which the coupon holders claimed that a special right attached in their favor. It was not a part of the corpus of the mortgaged property, but was a part of the increase from the use and management of that property.

2. The principal of the debt secured by the mortgage was not, by the terms of the bonds or of the mortgage, due or payable at the time of the rendition of the decree.

3. Bondholders to the amount of $3,931,000 consented to the claim of priority set up in favor of the coupons.

4. The holders of the coupons had paid full value for them to the original owners, so that such original owners, after having received the amount of their interest from the purchaser of the coupons, in full, are allowed, if the decree below stands, to come in competition with their own vendees of a part of the debt, in the distribution of the proceeds of the security.

5. The coupon-holders of 1874 unite the legal rights and the equities which spring from the earlier maturity of their claims and from the priority of their rights of action, with those which spring from the fact that they are not the original holders, but are the assignees of the original holders, of the coupons.

Propositions of Law

In support of the assignment of errors, and depending upon the foregoing syllabus of the facts.

I.

It is the duty of the court to ascertain, as against the debtor, and as against subsequent incumbrancers, the amount of money now presently due and payable by the debtor, and secured by the first mortgage, whether such indebtedness matured before the commencement of the suit, or has matured since suit brought, to the end that the debtor and the junior incumbrancers may be advised by the court what amount of money they are under obligation to pay, in order to redeem the property and prevent a foreclosure and sale.

12 B. Monroe, 185, Hopkins vs. Ward.
14 Wisconsin, 351, Manning vs. McClurg.
Wright's (Ohio) Rep. 522, Baker vs. Lehman.
4 Otto, 463, Howell vs. Western R. R. Co.

II.

As the day of payment named in the bonds has not arrived, and as no promise is implied by law against the company, nor expressed in the bonds or the mortgage, to pay the principal upon default in the payment of interest, nothing is presently due except the expenses of the suit, and the matured coupons with interest thereon. The latter is all for which an action at law could now be maintained against the debtor, and it is all which the complainants can now require any of the defendants to pay, in order to redeem the property and prevent a foreclosure; and it is the only debt to satisfy which a sale can be decreed.

13 Ohio, 240, Bank vs. Covert.
4 Otto, 463, Howell vs. Western R. R. Co.

III.

Yet the non-payment of the interest is sufficient to maintain the suit.

1 Bibb, 149, Adams vs. Essex.
9 Porter, 547, McVay vs. Bloodgood.
1 Alabama, N. S., 393, Walker vs. Hallett.
2 B. Monroe, 204, Caufman vs. Sayre.
11 Indiana, 245, Hunt vs. Harding.
7 Wisconsin, 566, Wood vs. Trask.
9 Wisconsin, 65, Bank vs. Bank.
23 Illinois, 30, Vansant vs. Allmon.
41 Miss., 284, Magruder vs. Eggleston.
7 Missouri, 489, Buford vs. Smith.
4 Otto, 463, Howell vs. Western R. R. Co.

IV.

The application of what money may remain out of the proceeds of the sale, after payment of the indebtedness now due, to the payment of unmatured indebtedness, is only incidental to the principal object of the suit. That application is made only because it is necessary for the court to dispose of what surplus may incidentally arise in the process of satisfying the matured indebtedness; not because the unmatured indebtedness constitutes a demand presently payable.

1 Alabama, N. S., 393, Walker vs. Hallett.
3 Bland, 179, Salmon vs. Clagett.
2 J. C. 485, Brinckerhoff vs. Thalheimer.
4 Id. 534, Campbell vs. Macomb.
4 Otto, 463, Howell vs. W. R. R. Co.

V.

The coupon holders being the only persons who have any present legal demand, the only persons entitled to have the land sold in satisfaction of their claim, and the only person whom the debtor is under obligation to pay off in order to redeem the land and prevent a foreclosure, their claim is in all respects prior in time and prior in right to that of every one else.

9 Porter, 547, McVay vs. Bloodgood.
13 Ohio, 240, Bank vs. Covert.
4 Otto, 463, Howell vs. W. R. R. Co.

VI.

The rule applicable in all cases of debts payable in successive instalments is, qui prior in tempore, potior est in jure; and that rule, according to the weight of authority, applies whether all the instalments have or have not matured before decree, except that, in Alabama and New York, where the creditor assigns an instalment, the assignee is regarded as having an equity superior to that of the assignor.

1 Randolph, 466, Gwathmeys vs. Ragland.
9 Wendell, 412, Mechanics' Bank vs. Niagara Bank.
9 Porter, 547, McVay vs. Bloodgood.
10 N. H., 466, Hunt vs. Stiles.
1 Alabama, 393, Walker vs. Hallett.
4 Id., 452, Cullum vs. Erwin.
13 Ohio, 240, Bank vs. Covert.
8 Blackford, 447, Bank vs. Tweedy.
32 Maine, 97, Larrabee vs. Lumbert.
6 Florida, 171, Wilson vs. Hayward.
7 Wisconsin, 566, Wood vs. Trask.
9 Id. 65, Bank vs. Bank.

23 Illinois, 30 Vansant vs. Allmon.
9 Iowa, 164, Grapengether vs. Fejervary.
11 Iowa, 211, Hines vs. Mooers.
17 Indiana, 52, Murdock vs. Ford.
36 Missouri, 526, Mitchell vs. Ladew.

VII.

It is true that where there is a special agreement to permit all classes of claims to share pro rata in the proceeds of sale, an equal pro rata distribution is decreed. Such is the case of

1 Wallace, 268, Dunham vs. R. R. Co.

That, however, is an exception. But for the peculiar language of the mortgage in that case, it would not have been an exception. The rule in Mississippi, also, appears to be an exceptional one, unless the intention of the parties, expressed or implied, requires the general principle to be applied.

23 Mississippi, 178, Bank of England vs. Tarleton.

It is submitted that the court below, in its opinion (p. 1039, fol. 1526), misapplied the case of Dunham vs. R. R. Co. That case does not announce any general rule, but only construed the particular contract then in question. The mortgage foreclosed in that case contained an express rule of distribution, by which principal was put upon an equality with interest. But in the mortgage here in question (foot of p. 32) the direction to the trustees, in case of sale, is, to apply so much of the proceeds of sale as may be necessary, to the payment of the principal and interest "which may then be due." And by reference to the bond (Ex. C, fol. 42) it will be found that the due date of the principal is fixed at November 1, 1883, and it is not pushed forward by the happening of any contingency, while an installment of interest matures at the end of each intervening period of six months.

VIII.

The case at bar is one which justifies the application of both the general rule above referred to, and the special rule in force in Alabama. The coupons are prior in time to the bonds. Their holders have also the superior equity arising from the fact that the original creditors made Alexander Duncan assignee of their claims. In a case where these features existed, but in which, also, all the instalments of the debt had matured, as they have not in the case at bar, it has been held by a Federal court that the coupon holder from whom the bondholder had received the money for his coupons, had an equity superior to that of the bondholder, and to that of the holders of coupons which matured at subsequent dates.

13 Blatchford, 412, Stevens vs. R. R. Co.

In the case last cited, the court uses the following language: "But, as to the holders of the unpaid coupons of July 1, 1873, there seems to me to be a special equity. It was through the advance of money to cash these coupons in the hands of the holders of the bonds to which they belonged, that such holders obtained the money for those coupons. On such advance, those coupons passed into the hands of those who now hold them. But for such advance, the coupons in the hands of the original holders of them would not have been worth their face value, as they were made to be by such advance. The original holders of such coupons must be regarded as still holding the bonds to which such coupons belonged; or if not, those who hold such bonds, and such maturing coupons belonging thereto, must be held to be subject to the same equities as such original holders."

In Louisiana, the right of an assignee to be paid in preference to his assignor, where the proceeds of sale are insufficient to pay both, is recognised.

20 Lou. Ann. 359, Ventress vs. his Creditors.

And where an sssignee of part of the mortgage debt has, by contract or otherwise, a right to priority of payment as against the remainder, the assignee of that remainder is chargeable with notice of the prior equity.

42 Illinois, 273, Walker vs. Dement.

IX.

The decree of the Circuit Court, denying priority to the coupons, was put upon an assumed rule of law, for which Dunham vs. R. R. Co., 1 Wallace, 268, was the only authority quoted.

It is shown above that that case does not establish a general rule, but only a particular one, arising from peculiar language in a particular case. And the learned court below added (fol. 1521), "the bondholders themselves, when they have not parted with the coupons, or when an instalment of interest or principal not represented by coupons is due, may foreclose and sell the whole security for the satisfaction of the amount due, and thus deprive themselves of security for the residue of the debt." This seems to the appellants to involve a concession of all they claim. Is the right thus declared, personal to the original creditor, or is it an incident to the ownership of the coupons, and does it not pass to the vendee of the coupon with the coupon itself?

X.

The practical injustice of denying priority to coupons, as between their former owner and their present holder, in such a case as this, will be manifest upon slight reflection.

A simple illustration will show it. A holds a $1,000 bond, with two interest coupons for $70 each, attached. He sells the coupons to B as they mature, and thus receives his $140 interest in full. But the debtor pays no part of the debt, and a foreclosure follows. The road sells for one-half of the indebtedness, that is, for $570. A, who has already received the whole of his interest, i. e., $140, from B, competes with B in the distribution of the proceeds of sale. He gets $500 on his bond, while B gets $70 on his coupons, and thus A obtains back from B one-half the interest which the latter has paid A. A in all has obtained 64 per cent. of his investment, and B has obtained 50 per cent. of his. No such injustice results from the rule we contend for. By that rule, A would have received $570 in all, and B $140. Multiply the factors in this sum, and the injustice grows more gross. The bondholders in this case have received from Alexander Duncan $535,000, the par value of their coupons. If they are allowed to compete with him in the distribution of the proceeds of sale, he may get only 25 or 50 per cent. of his money, while they may get 50 to 75 per cent. of theirs, counting what they have already received from him.

There is no stringent rule of equity rendering such injustice imperative. The maxim that equality is equity, does not require it; for that cannot be invoked to aid a party against his own voluntary act, in waiving his equality.

The equity rule which requires incumbered parcels of land to be sold in the inverse order of alienation, is only an illustration of the principle for which we are contending. A sentiment of natural justice would seem to dictate, that he who sells property for money, should use the money in perfecting the title to what he has sold; and that a sale of a coupon should imply a warranty that the vendor will not indirectly impair the value of what he has sold by subtracting from the value and proceeds of the security.

The legal rule that where the owner of two adjoining parcels of land sells one of them, that one which he retains is subject to an easement in favor of the grantee—that is, becomes the servient tenement, while that for which he has received his price becomes the dominant tenement, is another illustration of the same principle.

XI.

The appellants were entitled to the benefit of the stipulation of bondholders, who were such to the amount of $3,931,000 (pp. 1026 to 1053), that the coupons should have priority. Effect could have been given to that stipulation by a provision in the decree that all the coupons detached from bonds held by the stipulators, should be paid in full before any payment should be made on such bonds.

Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, now renew this stipulation in respect to all the bonds now held by them, and consent as such bondholders to a corresponding modification of the decree.

XII.

It is submitted that the errors assigned should be corrected, and the decree modified accordingly.

F. N. Bangs,
Of Counsel for Hays,
Pierson & Dupuy.

Relay

Supreme Court of the United States.

OCTOBER TERM, 1878.

No 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM, et al,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN, et al,
Appellees.

BRIEF and ARGUMENT
for Appellants.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. L. ANDREWS,
E. H. GRANDIN,
Of Counsel.

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1878.

No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM, ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN, ET. AL.
Appellees.

BRIEF FOR APPELLANTS.

This appeal is brought to review a decree of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama.

On the first day of November, 1853, the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company executed a first mortgage of its property to Morris Ketchum, and others, as trustees, to secure the holders of an issue of its bonds.

The subjects of the litigation arose under this mortgage and involve:

FIRST: The marshalling of the liens and the ascertainment of the priorities of claims under the mortgage.

SECOND: The enforcement of the trusts of the mortgage and the equitable realization of the security on behalf of those who may be adjudged entitled to its benefits.

Under the first head, the errors assigned relate to the coupon claims of Alexander Duncan. The appelants show that these claims are not entitled to deprive the first mortgage bondholders of a portion of their security. The appellees, Duncan and Elliott, seek to obtain for these claims a share of the first mortgage security, pari passu, with the bondholders. Hays, Dupuy and Pierson, who bring a cross-appeal, insist that the Duncan claims should be paid, with interest, out of the proceeds of the mortgaged property before anything is paid to the first mortgage bondholders. The decision below held the claims entitled to an equality with the first mortgage bonds. The foregoing positions were advanced through the following pleadings and proceedings:

On the 8th day of May, 1875, a bill of foreclosure was filed by Duncan and Elliott in the alleged capacity of trustees of the first mortgage.

Duncan's Bill.

"Your orators show, that on the 1st day of May, 1874, an instalment of interest fell due upon the bonds hereinbefore described; that again, on the 1st day of November, 1874, a like instalment of interest upon said bonds fell due; that neither of said instalments of interest were paid at maturity; that the coupons cut from said bonds, and representing said interest, were presented to said company, or to its agents, at the places appointed by it for the presentation of said coupons, and the payment of said interest, by the holders thereof, and payment demanded, but payment of said interest was refused, and the same is still due and unpaid, and the said Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company is now in default in the payment of said interest, which matured on the days before stated, and said company has remained in said default from the said 1st days of May and November, 1874; that the aggregate amount of said instalments of interest, and which is represented by interest coupons outstanding and unpaid, in the hands of the holders thereof, is six hundred and thirty-eight thousand, four hundred and seventeen $\frac{60}{100}$ dollars, or thereabouts, in the currency of the United States."

On the 6th of May, 1876, Morris Ketchum filed his bill as trustee of the first mortgage, for the execution of the trusts vested in him by the deed of the railroad company. He showed that payment had been made to the bondholders of the coupons falling due in 1874, and that no default on the first mortgage had occurred until May 1st, 1875.

Ketchum's Bill.

"And your orator is informed and believes that the said coupons so claimed to be matured and outstanding, are the same coupons which were presented by the holders thereof to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, and by it received and paid, and presumably canceled, as of right they should have been, but were, by the then president of the company, William B. Duncan, and by the directors thereof, delivered to Alexander Duncan, the father of the said William B. Duncan, and other persons, as pretended security for certain claims of said Alexander Duncan and others upon said Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company; that the said coupons are still in the possession of said Alexander Duncan and other persons, and are claimed by them to constitute a subsisting first prior and paramount lien upon the property conveyed to your orator in trust, as aforesaid. And your orator is informed and believes that the said Alexander Duncan and others claim and pretend, and will endeavor to use said coupons, which have been paid, and should be of right canceled, to bid for and obtain control of and title to the said Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company upon the sale thereof by foreclosure, under your orator's mortgage."

On the 30th day of March, 1877, Ziegler, Jump, Chavannes and associates filed a bill as first mortgage bondholders for the marshalling of the liens on the property, and the realization of their security thereon. They set forth in their bill, as folllows:

Zeigler Bill.

"Alexander Duncan, the father of the said William B. Duncan, had not exceeding seventy-five thousand dollars of first mortgage sterling bonds, but he has since claimed to hold certain coupons, principally for May and November, 1874, amounting to upwards of ($700,000) seven hundred thousand dollars as first mortgage liens on the property. These coupons were paid and surrendered in great part, on and after they became due, without notice being brought to the knowledge of most of the bondholders that any claim was set up to purchase them. In fact, the official reports of the company for the year 1874, exhibit net earnings to the amount of $707,865.04."

"During the entire year 1874 W. B. Duncan was a director of the company, and in general and substantial control of its board of direction and of its financial affairs, and from the first day of May, 1874, A. F. Elliott has been a director, and Duncan, the president. But so it is, that under this regime the greater part of the said sum of net earnings, to wit: Nearly $700,000 was appropriated to satisfy bills payable and other floating claims, instead of being applied to first mortgage interest. Most of these misapplications of funds were made by and through Duncan, Sherman & Company, and about ($100,000) one hundred thousand dollars of the said payments were made by Duncan, Sherman & Company on the 30th day of April, 1874. the very day before the May coupons on the first mortgage bonds fell due, and are claimed to have defaulted, and to have been acquired by Duncan, Sherman & Company, and by them afterwards transferred to Alexander Duncan."

On the 3d May, 1877, a report was filed by a Master in the Duncan suit, to whom a reference had been made to take proof and report on the priorities. Exceptions were filed by Charles Moran and Louis J. Belloni. pp. 800 to 816.

Exceptions were thereafter filed to the report by Hays, Dupuy and Pierson. p. 816.

On the 5th day of June, 1877, these three suits were consolidated by the following order:

Consolidation Order.

The parties in these several causes appearing in open Court by their respective solicitors and counsel, and consenting to this order.

And it appearing to the Court that the above entitled suits are instituted for the common purpose of securing a sale of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad and other property of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, under the first mortgage thereof, and disputes having arisen as to the legal title of and in said first mortgage, which might embarrass the sale of the mortgaged premises, and it appearing to the Court that all parties claiming said legal title are before the Court, and likewise the cestuis que trust of said first mortgage, and that a full and perfect title to said railroad and other mortgage property may be obtained under decrees in all of said suits combined.

It is, therefore, ordered that the above causes be consolidated, and proceed concurrently before this Court to final decree.

And it is further ordered that all the proofs taken, orders made, and proceedings had, in the cause first above entitled, may be read upon the hearing of the causes so consolidated in the same manner and with the same effect as if taken, made and had in all of said causes, and that the evidence taken before the Master in said first mentioned cause be read and used as evidence on the final hearing of said causes; and that said causes be set down for final hearing on the pleadings, proofs, orders, and proceedings forthwith.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
Circuit Justice.

W. B. WOODS,
Circuit Judge.

Immediately upon this consolidation of the causes new parties were admitted in each of the suits; new pleadings were filed by them, and the several suits were, by consent, brought to final issue by answers and replications.

Merian, Renevier, and other first mortgage bondholders, who were then admitted as defendants to the Duncan bill, filed their answer "as well in behalf of other holders of like bonds to the amount of over six hundred thousand dollars as for themselves," and alleged as follows:

Merian's Answer.

"Further answering, these defendants say: That the said Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company had not made default in the payment of the instalments of interest which accrued, matured and fell due upon its said first sterling mortgage bonds, upon the first day of May and November, 1874 respectively, and that it had not refused payment thereof, but on the contrary, they say that the same were at and after the said respective dates of their muturity, to wit, May 1st, 1874, and November 1st, 1874, fully paid and discharged to the holders thereof, by the said railroad company, and the same are not in equity outstanding debts of said company, or in any manner secured by said mortgage."

"Further answering, these defendants say: That the said interests which so accrued and matured on said first days of May and November, 1874, was evidenced by coupons or interest warrants, originally attached to bonds from which they were cut or detached by the holders and owners thereof, for presentation to and payment by said railroad company; that they are now presented and claimed to be held and owned by William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Dupuy, by transfer from Alexander Duncan, who is claimed to have acquired them when overdue, from the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Company, who claimed to have purchased the same from the holders thereof, partly at, but principally after their maturity."

"Further answering, these respondents say: That said Alexander Duncan is, and said Duncan, Sherman & Company were and are estopped to claim that said interest is unpaid; that the complainants were, at the maturity thereof, both partners of said firm, both directors of said company, whereof said Duncan was president and ex-officio chairman of its executive committee, and said Duncan, Sherman & Company were, and had long been the financial agents of said company, that said interest was paid with funds and moneys provided by said Duncan, Sherman & Company in the usual manner to the holders thereof, without any knowledge on their part that the same were not paid, and without any intention of selling the same, at times when said Duncan was in full possession and control of all the income and assets of said company, and the same were pledged by the Board of Directors thereof, to the payment of the interest upon said first mortgage bonds, and were placed in the hands of said Duncan, Sherman, as such financial agents for that purpose, and were sufficient for that purpose, but were and are claimed by said Duncan, Sherman & Company to have been by them diverted from such application, and applied to the reduction of the unsecured debt of said company, to themselves, and others."

Hays, Dupuy and Pierson, were admitted as defendants in each of the suits. They filed the following pleadings:

Hays' Answer to Ketchum and Zeigler Bills.

"These defendants allege and aver that they are the holders of bonds issued by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company upon the security of their first mortgage, mentioned in the bill of complaint in the bill in this cause, to the amount of three millions nine hundred thousand dollars and upwards and of interest arrearage bonds, issued on the security of the first mortgage, to the amount of $1,192,800, and of sterling interest bonds, issued under the security of said first mortgage, to the amount of $765,120, and of bonds, issued upon the second mortgage of said corporation, to the amount of $961,990, and of all the coupons attached to said bonds, and now remaining overdue and unpaid, and also of coupons formerly attached to said bonds and which matured in the year 1874, to the amount of $535,000 and upwards, all of which claims they aver and allege are entitled to be paid in the order of their maturity out of the proceeds of the mortgaged premises mentioned in the bill of complaint in this cause, and they deny all the averments and allegations in said bill of complaint which in any way tend to impeach, impair, weaken or diminish the claims arising upon the said bonds and coupons, and these defendants accept and adopt the answer made in this cause by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, and the answer made in this cause by William Butler Duncan and Andrew F. Elliott."

Duncan, who was an original defendant to the Ketchum bill, had filed the following:

Duncan's Answer.

"As to the allegations of the bill that the coupons which matured in May and November, 1874, were paid by said railroad company, and were by this respondent and the directors of said railroad company, after said payment, and when the said coupons should have been canceled, delivered to Alexander Duncan and others as pretended security for certain claims against said corporation—this respondent states that the same are false. No portions of said coupons that fell due in the year 1874 were paid by said railroad company, or by any money in any manner furnished by it or advanced to it by any person or persons whatever, or by any person for said corporation. A portion of the coupons which fell due in 1873, were paid by money advanced to said corporation by this respondent and his then firm, Duncan, Sherman & Company; as to these, no claim has been made that they are outstanding, that payment was made by money loaned the railroad company. But the coupons of 1874 were not so paid, and have not been extinguished; they were with the assent of the corporation, purchased from the then holders thereof, with the distinct agreement that they were not canceled or impaired by such purchase, but still remained in the hands of the purchasers, valid coupons of the first mortgage bonds, with all the rights and remedies by which they were originally protected, to be enforced at the discretion of the holder. This purchase was an act friendly to said railroad company; it was made at a time of general and wide-spread distrust in the money market of the country, and of extraordinary depression in all commercial business, the object being, to have these evidences of debt in hands of friends having also other interests in the property, and by the gratuitous allowance of reasonable time, enable the corporation to see whether its affairs would not so improve that it could in 1875, resume the regular payment of its interests from its own resources. This hope, which was entertained by the directors of said railroad company, was not verified in the experience of the corporation, and the holders of said coupons so acquired, with others, demand as respondent is advised they had good right to do, of this respondent and his associates, that they should execute the powers of the mortgage for the protection of themselves and the other creditors of said corporation, secured by said first mortgage. Common replications were filed by the complainants in the several suits. The statement of the bill as to the facts attending these coupons due in 1874, are not true."

On the foregoing Pleadings, as settled and submitted, the cause went to Final Hearing under the Consolidation Order.

By the terms of that order the testimony to be used under the new pleadings on the final hearing, was required to be the same which had been taken before the Master, and we therefore deem ourselves constrained to confine our statement of facts to that testimony.

The Evidence was adduced to prove

By the Coupon Claimants,

I. That the bondholders had sold their coupons to Duncan, Sherman & Co., and that these coupons had not ceased to form a part of the first mortgage.

II. That Duncan, Sherman & Co. had acquired by subrogation, a share of the first mortgage to the amount of the coupons.

By the First Mortgage Bondholders,

I. That the bondholders had not sold their coupons to Duncan, Sherman & Co.

II. That Duncan, Sherman & Co. and their assignee, are estopped by fraud and breach of trust from setting up these coupons as first mortgage liens.

III. That the marshalling of the assets, shows the coupons to have been paid to Duncan, Sherman & Co., under a special appropriation of the net earnings which they misappropriated to other uses.

TESTIMONY.

First Public Default.

On the 23d of April, 1875, the directors of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company issued the following circular to its bondholders :

MOBILE, April 23d, 1875.

The directors of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company beg to inform the holders of their bonds that the unexampled falling off in earnings, resulting from business depression general throughout the country and which will probably continue till another crop is assured, deprives the company of the ability to meet the May interest at its maturity. All the earnings of the past business season have been applied to arrears of pay-rolls, to current supplies, to necessary improvements of the road and to other matters which are strictly in the interest of the bondholders. All our labor and current supply bills are now paid as far as practicable in cash. The directors recognise the fact that the bondholders have the first claim on the property, and that it is impera- tive upon the direction to apply all the earnings of the road to the interest in the strict order of equity. With this assurance the directors invite the confidence of the holders of the mortgage liens to enable them to make some acceptable proposition upon a substantial basis which will permit the continued development of the property in the interest of all concerned.

For details of the application of the earnings of the past year, the directors beg leave to refer to the annual report of the company.

By order or the Board.

(Signed) A. L. WILLOUGHBY,

Secretary.

A few days after this showing, on May 8, 1875, Duncan and Elliott, claiming as trustees, filed their pending bill to enforce coupons of 1874, which they asserted that Duncan, Sherman & Co. had purchased a year previous to the above Circular of Default. p. 315-316

y were afterwards
nsferred to A.
ncan. p 312

The above announcement of the corporation in April, 1875, was the first open default on the First mortgage.

Opinion.

The bondholders knew nothing of any previous default. The Circular was the first public notice on the subject. pp. 479, 480, 484.

The corporation stood before the bondholders as a solvent debtor when the time had arrived for Payment of May Coupon, 1874.

LONDON.

There had been for some years a change of office for this payment from the place prescribed in the bond. It was no longer at George Peabody's, but at the Union Bank. p. 650.

In May, 1874, the bondholders simply presented their coupons at the Union Bank, and were paid their money. There is no pretense in the testimony of any sale by the bondholders.

Testimony of Manager of Union Bank.

Examined on behalf of Alexander Duncan.

FIRST.—To the first interrogatory, he saith: Yes. I am the general manager of the Union Bank of London, and I occupied the same position during the year 1874.

SECOND.—To the second interrogatory he saith: Yes. The Union Bank of London paid the coupons of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, maturing on the first of May and the first of July, 1874, under instructions from Duncan, Sherman & Company, of New York, on their credit and under their responsibility, holding the coupons uncancelled on their account. The Union Bank of London had no communication with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company.

THIRD.—To the third interrogatory he saith: The coupons were sent to Duncan, Sherman & Company, from time to time uncancelled under registered cover.

FOURTH.—To the fourth interrogatory, he saith: No money was advanced on account of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company; it was advanced on account of Duncan, Sherman & Company, to whom alone the Union Bank of London looked for reimbursement. The coupons were in the first instance posted to a special account in the name of Duncan, Sherman & Company, which was subsequently closed by transfers of cash from their general account.

Cross-Interrogatories.

First.—To the first cross-interrogatory he saith: The Union Bank of London acted in accordance with instructions received by cable, a copy of which, dated April 28th, 1874, I hereunto annex, marked A. (This is the dispatch printed above.)

Second. To the second cross-interrogatory he saith: I am not aware of any enquiries having been made when the coupons were left for examination; if such enquiries were made, the answer would have been that we, the Union Bank of London, received our instructions from Duncan, Sherman & Company. pp. 391 to 393.

MOBILE.

May and November.

By an arrangement existing since the issue of the bonds, and expressed by a certificate on certain of the bonds, some were payable in Mobile. p. 163.

In 1874 there was no published communication from the directors indicating that the company would not pay the accruing coupon; nothing either in the newspapers or by circular. p. 565.

There was no paper purporting to be a notice in the Company's office, or elsewhere, in May. There was in November. p. 226.

There was no communication from or intimation by any one to the bondholders that he, she, or it desired to purchase their coupons. pp. 217, 218.

As usual, the bondholders went to the office of the railroad company, their debtor. pp. 191, 193, 195 et al.

As in previous years, the same official, the treasurer, examined their coupons. same pages.

The railroad company had always given some form of order, warrant or check. pp. 479, 480, 485.

These vouchers for money were always addressed by the company to the Bank of Mobile. same pages.

The place of deposit of its moneys was in the Bank of Mobile. same, and pages 219, 229.

The bondholders had been continually in the habit of dealing with the railroad company through the Bank of Mobile. pp. 483, 217.

The president of the bank was a director of the company and chairman of the finance committee. p. 207.

The treasurer of the railroad company and his assistant testified that after examining the coupons they put them in envelopes, endorsed—

"Paid to (Holder) dollars." p. 224.

Similar envelope warrants had been used on previous occasions. pp. 230, 485.

The Bank of Mobile, on presentation of the envelopes with the memorandum of payment placed on them by the company, delivered the money without a word f any kind. p. 216. *

* Except when it deferred to the railroad company. p. 198.

verified

The following is the substance of the testimony on the subject of the Mobile payments, which we quote at length on account of the weight given it in the opinion.

[Nathan Whiting.]—I was and am a holder of first mortgage sterling bonds.

My bonds are not in default for any interest of 1874; I have no claim against the company for the interest of 1874. The Court has the record of the balance of my interest.

I presented my coupons in person for May and November, 1874, to Mr. Willoughby, the treasurer, at the office of the company and got the money for them from him until the last payment; and then the coupons were left with Mr. Willoughby for a day, I think, and the next day I went and got them in an envelope with the amount placed on the back, and I was directed personally to Mr. E. B. Gale, at the bank of Mobile, who paid them. Since then I have collected nothing.

Q. At the times in the year 1874 that you presented your coupons you cut off of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company's sterling and interest bonds to the treasurer Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company for payment, did you or not, see any written notice in the office, or was or not any verbal notice given to you by the treasurer or other person employed in the office, that, or to the effect that, or conveying the impression that the company was not paying its first mortgage sterling coupons, but that the same were being purchased by any person or persons?

A. I have no recollection of seeing any notice in the office. My coupons were handed to Mr. Willoughby, and when they were returned to me, I am pretty sure he never said anything about any one buying them, but referred me to the Bank of Mobile to get my money.

Q. When, to your knowledge, did the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company first make default in the payment of its first mortgage coupons?

A. The first I heard of it was 1st May, 1875.

EXHIBIT.

COUPONS.

Paid to Nathan Whiting,

£3 at $32.50 gold....	$97 50
Total gold....	97 50

May.

P. 195.

Testimony of John W. Holmes.

Q. Did you not believe when you delivered your coupons the last time when you presented coupons, that the same were paid and satisfied and ceased to be a first mortgage lien on the property?

(Objected to by Mr. Stewart as involving the belief of the witness instead of the facts.)

A. I had no reason to believe anything else; I never made any inquiry. I thought the earnings of the road paid the interest.

Q. Were you ever notified in any manner at any time that you presented coupons for payment, that your coupons were not going to be paid, but were going to be puchased by somebody else for the company?

A. I never had any intimation of that kind. I remember at one time the treasurer, Mr. Willoughby, detained me some time, eight or ten days, and stated that the company was pressed. p. 538.

Testimony of William H. Ross.

Q. What transpired when you presented you coupons to the treasurer.

A. On one occasion he took my coupons, as I understood him, for the purpose of registration or comparison, and then and there handed them back and directed me to go to the Bank of Mobile for the money. He put them in an envelope—put the numbers on the back, (I think he sealed it) and directed me to go to Mr. Gale, who opened it and then paid the money.

The numbers of my bonds, with the coupons, are in proof before the Master; I think there is somewhere in the neighborhood of thirty thousand dollars.

Q. At the times in the year 1874, that you presented your coupons cut off, of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company's sterling and interest bonds to the treasurer Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company for payment, did you or not see any written notice in the office, or was or not any verbal notice given to you by the treasurer, or other person employed in the office, that, or to the effect that, or conveying the impression that the company was not paying its first mortgage sterling coupons, but that the same were being purchased by any person or persons?

A. I recollect nothing of that sort. I saw no notice that the coupons were to be purchased. I never heard of such a thing.

Q. Did the difference in the mode of payment in 1874 from previous payments strike you?

A. My recollection is, that it did, and I remarked upon it and I was told that the company had made arrangements with the Bank of Mobile to pay those coupons.

Q. Who told you so?

A. I don't recollect. It was some one in the office of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. pp. 194, 481.

Testimony of Hazard.

In November, 1874, I went to the office and presented the coupons for payment, and they were passed to Mr. Bull, and he gave me an envelope containing these coupons, and I sent my clerk to the Bank of Mobile with the envelope to collect the amount, and he brought it back some sixteen dollars short; I then took the money back and got my coupons from Mr. Gale and took them to Mr. Willoughby, who corrected the error, and he gave me another envelope with the coupons, and I went to the Bank of Mobile and got my money. p. 198.

Testimony of Egbert H. Grandin.

In the year 1874, the coupons of all the bonds in my hands, held by me in the capacities that I have named, were paid. I don't think, I am not positive, that I ever visited this office, the office of the railroad company, and presented any of those coupons. I know that some of them were deposited by me in the Bank of Mobile, in this city, and in a bank or banking house in New York, and they were paid, or at least I never heard of them again. I have an indistinct recollection that on one occasion, in 1874, I saw Mr. Willoughby, and learned from him that the Bank of Mobile was paying the coupons.

I state most positively, that I never had any idea, and never had any reason to suppose, that the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company made default in the payment of its first mortgage coupons, either on the 1st May or 1st November, 1874. On the contrary, I had reason, (what I considered to be the best reason) to believe that there had been no such default on the 1st May, 1874, because on my expressing to one of the directors of the company, near about the 1st May, 1874, my doubt as to the ability of the company long to continue to pay its interest on its bonded debt, he assured me that I need have no doubt about it. This director was Mr. Wm. H. Pratt. I had very strong doubt about the solvency of the company, and expressed those doubts to parties in this city, and the director came to me and asked why I was depreciating the securities of the company, or something to that effect. It was then I expressed my doubt and received his assurance. The first time that I ever heard, in any way, shape, manner or form, that this company had made default, or proposed to make default, in the payment of any of its interest, was when it issued its circular of 1st March, 1875, to its second mortgage bondholders, announcing that it would be compelled to pass the payment of its coupons, or something to that effect. As a matter of course, I then looked for the default in the first mortgage coupons on the 1st May, 1875. pp. 619, 620.

Impression produced on Bondholders.

Nothing said about any one buying their coupons.

p. 479.	NATHAN WHITING,
p. 619.	E. H. GRANDIN.

I never heard of such a thing.

p. 480.	WILLIAM H. ROSS,

I don't think I was told anything about it.

p. 484.	HUGH MONROE.

Made no inquiries why it was that the coupons before 1874 were paid by the company, and those for 1874 sent to the Bank of Mobile.

p. 480.	NATHAN WHITING.

"No, I thought nothing about it."

p. 482.	JAMES B. HAZARD.

Saw no notice, and was told about none.

p. 484.	HUGH MONROE,
p. 482.	JAMES HAZARD.

Did not see any notice, and never heard of any.

p. 192. Theodore Guesnard.

Mr. Willoughby told me to take my coupons to the Bank of Mobile and they would be paid.

p. 193. W. H. Ross.
p. 191. Theodore Guesnard.

Willoughby said he would send them down to the Bank of Mobile, and Mr. Gale would put them to my credit.

p. 483. Hugh Monroe.

First default in first mortgage bonds, to their knowledge, was in May, 1875.

p. 480. William H. Ross,
p. 479. Nathan Whiting,
p. 482. James Hazard,
p. 620. E. H. Grandin,
p. 665, 677. Dougherty,
p. 679, 699, 700. Thorburn.

If we may use evidence not before the Master, the following was the Testimony of Charles Moran.

He knew nothing about any claims of purchasing coupons until September, 1874, and at that time he warned Duncan in substance, that he must know whether the coupons for November were to be bought or paid. Notwithstanding this, Duncan did not make any contract with the bondholders for the purchase in November.

Q. 283. You had a conversation with Mr. Duncan in 1874, on that subject, didn't you?

A. No, sir.

Q. 284. Didn't you tell Mr. Duncan, in May, 1874, to be careful in purchasing those coupons that he complied with all necessary forms?

A. No, sir; if Mr. Duncan so informed you, he is misinformed as to dates; I had such a conversation, but it was later in September, I think, in 1874.

Q. 285. You then advised him, if he purchased coupons, to be careful that he complied with all necessary forms?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. 286. What made you talk to him about purchasing coupons, and keeping them alive?

A. Because he told me he might purchase them, and I cautioned him as a friend.

Q. 287. You understand they were purchased in September, 1874?

A. No, I do not; he said something about there might be a purchase.

Q. 288. If they were purchased, what objection have you got to their being paid?

(Objected to.)

A. I will not answer.

Q. 289. If they were purchased under your advice?

A. I am not trying this case before Justice Bangs, I believe.

Q. 290. I know as well as you do you are not trying the case before me, but I know I am trying you, and you do not stand the trial as well as you think you do; I would like to have you state what objection you have to Mr. Duncan's being paid the amount of the coupons you advised him to purchase?

A. I did not give him the advice.

Q. 291. Didn't you say you gave him the advice?

A. I gave him advice to be careful what he did.

Q. 292. Did you not advise him to be careful, and to conform with all necessary forms?

A. I told him to be careful, or he might lose all the rights of the mortgages.

Q. 293. If he purchased bonds?

A. If he purchased coupons.

Payment of Amy's Coupons.

MOBILE, May 7, 1874.

Messrs. H. Amy & Co., New York:

Gents.—We have received your favor of the 30th with stated enclosures and note contents. The Mobile and Ohio Railroad are only paying $32.50 each gold, for ex-certificate sterling coupons.

In returns for 24 coupons, $32.50 each, $780 gold, we hand you our No. 18,497 on Germ. Am. Bank, $776 12
½ prem. . . 3 88—$780
In returns for 3 coupons each $40 . . $120 00
Less express charges . . . . 3 50—$116 50

We hand you our No. 18,502 on Germ. Am. Bank, $116.21, ¼ per ct. prem. 29, $116 50.

Yours, truly,

(Signed) THOS. P. MILLER & CO.

Testimony of Treasurer.

Alonzo L. Willoughby, a witness called for Alexander Duncan, and sworn, deposes and say:

Q. Were you in 1874 an officer of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, and if so, in what capacity did you act? Were you in that office before and since?

A. I was, secretary and treasurer, before and since.

Q. Are you now in the office or employment under the trustees and receivers, and if so, what?

A. I hold the office of treasurer for the trustees and receivers.

Q. Please state whether you have been in the habit of paying the coupons of interest for that company for several years previous to 1874, as treasurer.

A. I have.

Q. Please state, previous to 1874, where and in what manner the coupons were paid.

A. The coupons were paid at my office, also in New York and London.

Q. Were those paid in Mobile, paid by you?

A. They are prior to 1874; the coupons were taken up by me and registered and paid.

Q. Were the coupons of 1874 on the first mortgage bonds due 1st May and 1st November, paid by said company, or by you?

A. They were not.

Q. Please state what occurred in respect to those coupons in May and November, and if they were taken up, how it was done, and by whom. In what manner?

A. The coupons due in May and November, 1874, were presented to me at my office for payment by parties claiming to be the owners or agents through the banks who held them for collection, also, through the express company. Some were sent direct to me by mail or express. I received the coupons, sorted them in envelopes, describing their contents, and told the parties to present them to the Bank of Mobile, who were paying them. To those parties who sent them by mail, I enclosed them in similar envelopes and sent them to the Bank of Mobile for collection, who invested the proceeds in their checks on New York, which I enclosed to the senders.

Q. Please state, if in any one instance you paid any of the coupons above mentioned at your office?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you ever, in any single instance, give a check, as treasurer of the company, to any of the holders of said coupons of May and November, 1874?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you ever, in any instance, give a check or order on T. P. Miller and Company for payment in gold of any of said coupons?

A. I did not.

Q. Please state whether the parties were informed, and particularly when they inquired, that the company did not pay said coupons?

A. They were so informed.

Q. Please state if any notice in writing was put up in your office in respect to payment of said coupons?

A. There was.

Q. Was there such notice at both periods, May and November?

A. There was no written notice in May; there was in November.

Q. Where was said notice put up or fixed?

A. It was pasted on my counter, in full view of all.

Q. What was the purport of the notice?

(The question objected to on the ground that it is not competent to give the purport of a written notice. The notice must be produced.)

A. That the coupons were being purchased by the Bank of Mobile, or at the Bank of Mobile.

Q. Have you said notice or a copy of it; is it in existence, or has it been destroyed?

A. I am not positive, but think it is destroyed. The notice was pasted on the counter, and gradually wore out.

Q. How were the coupons of years prior to 1874 paid by you as treasurer?

A. By checks on different banks where I had my deposit.

Q. Was one of those banks the Bank of Mobile?

A. It was.

Q. Had the railroad company a current deposit account with the Bank of Mobile, and for what time?

A. Yes, for many years, and up to the neighborhood of the time the trustees took charge.

Q. Did you as treasurer of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company refuse payment of the May and November coupons, of 1874 in any instance?

A. I told them when asked that the company were not paying them—that they could go to the Bank of Mobile and get their money, conveying the impression to all that the company was not in funds. That is the impression I intended to convey and believe I did so convey it, because parties went to the Bank of Mobile to collect their coupons instead of coming to me.

Q. Is that all the refusal of payment you made?

A. It is, according to my recollection.

Q. Will you positively swear that you stated to all parties presenting coupons to you in May and November, 1874, that the company was not in funds?

A. I cannot positively as to May, but I can as to November, or words to that effect, and referring, also, to the notice pasted up.

Q. Then you do positively swear that you stated to every party that presented coupons to you for November, 1874, that the company was not in funds?

A. Verbally, I believe I did; I can swear it to the best of my knowledge and belief, especially to those who asked information.

Q. Did you not, in all cases, tell parties presenting coupons to go to the Bank of Mobile with the envelope enclosing coupons and they would get their money?

A. I did—with the remark that the Bank of Mobile was paying the coupons—endeavoring to leave the impression that the company was not in funds; I am positive that I told some of them, too.

Q. Did the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company announce themselves insolvent in May, 1874, or November, 1874?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Was any notice ever given by you, as treasurer of the company, that the coupons of May and November, 1874, were being purchased by Duncan, Sherman & Co?

A. No.

Q. Was there, to your knowledge, any understanding or agreement between the railroad company or its officers, and the Bank of Mobile or its officers, that the bank would pay to the bearer of the envelopes, inclosing coupons with your recommendation indorsed thereon the amount indicated by such memorandum?

A. My knowledge and understanding was that the Bank of Mobile would pay the coupons after having been verified by me. I simply used this envelope, having a quantity of them on hand, as a means of describing them. I don't recollect of any particular form or statement to be used, or of any understanding to that effect.

Q. By whom were those envelopes gotten up and prepared, and for what purpose.

A. They were prepared by me and originated with me for my own convenience, and for the purpose of securing coupons from loss after being paid. They were simply used between me and the auditor to preserve the coupons from loss; similar ones were used by me prior to 1874; they were paid by for the company like all other blanks.

Q. Were not the envelopes inclosing the coupons delivered by you, with your memoranda, endorsed thereon, to the bearers of the coupons, to be by them presented to the bank in order to get the amount of money indicated by the memorandum?

A. They were.

Q. Was not that circular letter the first notice given to the public, that the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company could not pay its interest on its bonded indebtedness?

(Objected to on the ground that there is no such circular letter in evidence—the fact is assumed and evidence irrelevant.

A. I think it was the first public notice.

Q. There was such a letter, was there not? Can you produce a copy of it?

A. Yes. I here produce the copy.

(Copy produced and marked Exhibit 1.)

Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company,
Mobile, Ala., March 1st, 1875.

To the holders of second mortgage bonds:

The depression in business all over the country, and especially in the Southern portion of it, resulting, of necessity, in a great decrease of earnings, compels the board of directors reluctantly to ask your indulgence on coupons due this day. An increase of earning from an improved condition of business, with an economical administration of affairs, combined with the assurance of the board that all receipts will be faithfully applied to the payment of the liabilities of the company, will we trust, induce you to give us the indulgence, and thereby enable us to protect second mortgage as well as first mortgage bondholders, who have the precedence over you.

The value of our property and its earning power is beyond question, and with the return of prosperity to the country, is ample for the protection of all, if we are left free from the embarrassments of litigation.

By order of the board:

A. L. WILLOUGHBY,
Treasurer.

Q. Why was not public notice given that the company would not pay its coupons of May and November, 1874?

(Question objected to for incompetency, and because the witness is not competent to answer it.)

A. I don't know.

Q. Do you not know, or at least believe, that the bondholders of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company believed the company to be solvent, as to them, until the issuance of the circular letter just before March 1st, 1875, announcing that the company would make default on the second mortgage coupon due March 1st, 1875:

(Objected to on the ground that it is a question that the witness is not competent to answer. That it assumes a fact not in evidence, and for irrelevancy.)

A. I do not know what the bondholders believe.

Q. The question is not as to what the bondholders believe, but what you know and believe yourself?

A. Not knowing what they believed, I have no opinion at all.

Q. Do you believe, or have you any idea, that the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company was generally believed to be insolvent as to its bonded debt, prior to the issuance of the circular just before 1st March, 1875?

(Objected to, for incompetency and irrelevancy.)

A. I did not believe so. I have no idea what the impression of the public was.

Q. Will you say, on your oath, that you conveyed, or attempted to convey, the impression to any bondholder in the year 1874, that the company was unable to meet its interest on its bonded debt out of its net income?

(Objected to, for irrelevancy.)

A. I don't believe I ever did, as I never kept the books.

Q. Mr. Willoughby, on pages 26 and 27 of your cross-examination, mention is made of your telling every one who presented coupons what is therein stated as to mode of payment, please state what is the meaning of your answer and whether you intend it to be that you gave the information to every one who presented coupons, literally speaking, or to those only with whom you did converse on the subject?

(Question objected to by counsel for Mr. Belloni and trustees of the second mortgage, on the following grounds: that it is incompetent for a witness to state the meaning of an answer to a given question and to state what he intended the answer to be. The answer speaks for itself and the witness is bound by it.)

A. My answer is, that to those who asked for information I gave them the information that the company were not paying their coupons. I believe that I intended to convey the impression to all that I saw or conversed with. I was not present all of the time. While I was absent to dinner or on business, Mr. Bull, my clerk, was in the office, who attended to those calling. I do not mean to be understood that I conversed with every person, literally, who presented coupons.

Q. With whom did you converse on the subject of the paying of the coupons by the Bank of Mobile? Name any party, holder of coupons, to whom you gave notice verbally that the company was not in funds.

A. It is impossible for me to particularize after such a lapse of time. As I said before, to those who asked for information I gave it.

Q. Did you, in any instance, call the attention of any coupon bearer to either of the notices you swear were put up?

A. I believe I did.

Q. Name the instance; give the name of the party whose attention you called to either notice.

A. The same answer as before: lapse of time.

Page 223 to 233, and 243, 244.

Testimony of Edward B. Gale,

Teller of Bank of Mobile.

Q. Please state whether you know of the transactions in that bank, by which the coupons of the first mortgage of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, payable on the 1st May and 1st November, 1874, were taken up from the holders?

A. I know nothing of any transactions or arrangements made; I only know that I paid the coupons for gold and currency for May and November, 1874, upon such certificates as these which came from Mr. Willoughby, of the railroad office. [The certificates exhibited, and two attached.]

The certificates were presented by the coupon holders. As I understand it, the coupons were presented to Mr. Willoughby, who enclosed them in the envelope, and the parties brought them to me, and I paid on the envelopes, with the endorsement on them, by orders of the president.

Q. Were not the coupons surrendered to you by the persons whom you paid?

A. The coupons were enclosed in these envelopes, and were surrendered to me.

Q. Did any of the holders make any inquiry of you as to why it was that these coupons were paid at the bank instead of the railroad company?

A. I can't say that they did, only in this way: they would bring their coupons to the bank to get their money on, and I would send them to the railroad company; they wanted to know why I would not pay, and I told them they had to take them to Mr. Willoughby to see if they were correct, and he would examine them and enclose them in an envelope, and on that envelope I would pay the money for them, just exactly as they are done here, (referring to the envelope.) pp. 216, 217.

Testimony of William H. Pratt.

Q. You were chairman of the Finance Committee Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company throughout the months of May and November, 1874?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it intended by the directors Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, in May and November, 1874, that any inability of the company to pay the coupons for those periods on the First Mortgage Bonds should be publicly known?

A. I speak for myself. Of my own knowledge there was no intention to conceal it from the public. I believe it was intended it should be known.

Q. What was done (if it was intended it should be known) to make it publicly known by the directors Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company?

A. There was no publication by the press or any written notice that I am aware of.

Q. Was there any concealment or withholding of any information by you as to the real nature of the transaction by which the coupons were taken up?

A. There was no concealment; if I had been asked I would have stated that I was purchasing for Duncan, Sherman & Company, or on account of whom it may concern, according to their instructions.

Q. Was any question made to you by any of the holders of said coupons as to the mode and manner of their being taken up?

A. I have no recollection of any questions; certainly no objections were made.

Q. Can you state whether or not it was generally known that the company was not paying its interest in May and November?

A. That, I can't answer; it is impossible for me to tell how general the information was.

Q. Were you a director of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company during the whole of the year 1874?

A. I was. From the election in March or April, 1874.

Q. Was William Butler Duncan, of the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Company, a director during the whole of that year?

A. Mr. Duncan was a director and president after the election in March or April.

Q. When did it become known to the directors that the company would be unable to pay its coupons?

A. Immediately after the installment of the new board of directors it was found that the company would be unable to pay the interest that fell due on the 1st of May.

Q. When was Mr. Duncan first elected president of the company?

A. At the first meeting of the new board.

Q. Was there or not any agreement or understanding that Mr. Duncan or his firm would supply money to meet the coupons? If so, what was it?

A. Of my own knowledge I can't say that any negotiations were going on prior to the meeting of the new board. Negotiations were sanctioned by the new board with Duncan, Sherman & Company, or William Butler Duncan, to meet the payment of coupons falling due on the 1st of May. I don't recollect any agreement. I know of no agreement made by the board, and I presume that it was understood that Duncan, Sherman & Company were to purchase the coupons falling due May, 1874, and hold the same uncancelled for their security. I presume the negotiations were carried on by the vice-president, Mr. Walker, in writing.

Agreeable to said instructions, I instructed the cashier of the bank to pay to parties who might present the coupons, after they had been presented at and verified at the railroad office, the amount for which they called, upon surrender of the coupons. Said amounts were charged to the account of Duncan, Sherman & Company, and the same reimbursed to the bank by drafts on their house in New York, drawn by the president of the bank. pp. 211, 213, 565.

Testimony of William B. Duncan.

The firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co. had previously, in November, 1873, advanced to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company to enable them to meet the interest maturing November 1, 1873, and January 1, 1874, the company agreeing to remit the same out of earnings and from any other sources at their disposition. Duncan, Sherman & Co. made during the whole of the period extending from 1873 to May, 1875, frequent and large advances to the company for the general purposes of their business. The remittances made by the company during 1874 to Duncan, Sherman & Co. and deposited by the company with the Bank of Mobile to the credit of Duncan, Sherman & Co., were in payment to Duncan, Sherman & Co. of the moneys advanced by them to meet the coupons of November, 1873, and January, 1874, in accordance with the agreement made by the company with Duncan, Sherman & Co. at the time of taking up said coupons, and somewhat for the purpose of transmitting funds to Duncan, Sherman & Co. for the general purposes of the company; and any such remittances on deposits as were not applied to redeeming the coupons of 1873, we appropriated under the explicit direction of the company at Mobile. As I have before stated, I had frequent conversations with the holders both before I determined to purchase and at the time of purchasing such coupons, stating generally the condition of the company; its inability to meet its interest; its cash, I endeavor to obtain advances for account of the company from several parties. I would name Mr. William H. Hays who was at that time interested in the securities, and through Mr William W. Clark and George T. Bonner, Messrs. Clark and Bonner were brokers who knew many of the holders of the securities, but was unsuccessful in obtaining assistance through them for account of the company. There was no concealment with reference to the affairs of the company; its financial condition was well known to all those who cared to inquire; the non-payment of the coupons for the year 1874, and January, 1875, was well known and was distinctly referred to and mentioned in the report of 1874, a copy of which is produced to be mailed and annexed as part of my deposition.

I have reason to believe that the parties who purchased the coupons in London and Mobile, notified inquirers that they were purchasing the coupons for Duncan, Sherman & Co.

I instructed my clerks to give this notice to the parties, and I gave the notice to the parties who spoke with me personally.

The firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co., had to do, in the years 1874 and 1875, with the getting together and acquiring the ownership of the coupons maturing at the dates mentioned in the inquiry. Previous to and at May, 1874, my firm was largely interested in the securities of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company. I was applied to to take the presidency of the road at that time. The directors also applied to my firm to advance large sums of money to meet the indebtedness of that company, and also to meet the interest which was about to mature on the 1st of May, 1874. My firm was at that time in considerable advance to the company, and agreed in the latter part of April, 1874, that they would purchase the coupons about to mature on the 1st of May, and not press the company for payment then. The company offered and did assign to me, for the protection of my firm for past and future indebtedness, the claim they had upon the United States Government. I produce a copy of that assignment, to be made part of annexed to my disposition.

The facts I have mentioned were of course known to the directors of the company, and, I believe, to the trustees of the mortgage bonds. I am certain they were known to one of the trustees at least.

The foregoing facts in relation to the purchase of the coupons were stated to any inquirers, and were well-known to all those who were conversant with the affairs of the company. The directions given were by me as senior member of the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co.

Pp. 304, 310, 314.

Testimony of Peter Hamilton.

Q. Please state whether or not you were the holder of first mortgage bonds, or agent for others holding them, and did you present any coupons for payment in May or November of that year; if so, state all you may know in relation to the payment of said coupons, or the manner in which they were disposed of in that year?

A. In behalf of my wife and others I held nine sterling bonds and seven interest arrearage bonds. On or about the 1st May, 1874, I presented their then maturing coupons to the treasurer of the company. He requested me to leave them until he could examine them. I did so. I called, probably the next day, when Mr. Willoughby handed me the coupons back in an envelope, with some memorandum of numbers, and I think my name was written on the envelope, and told me to carry the coupons to the Bank of Mobile and I would get the money for them. This was different from the former mode of collecting the interest, and I enquired whether the railroad was paying its interest. The information I received was that the Bank of Mobile was buying the coupons for Mr. Duncan, or his firm, or associates. I carried the envelope with the coupons to the Bank of Mobile, and presented them to Mr. Gale, the teller, who gave me the money for them, giving me a check on T. P. Miller & Co., for the gold portion. The occurrence with regard to the November coupons was very much the same, the only difference that I remember being this: that, to my question whether the same thing was being done then as in May, Mr. Willoughby—my recollection is—raised my arm, which was on the counter, and directed my attention to a notice which was lying on the counter, stating that the Bank of Mobile was buying, or purchasing, or taken up, the coupons—I don't remember the precise language of it.

Q. Do you recollect of seeing, also, a written notice, pasted upon the glass door on entering the treasurer's office, that the coupons were being paid by the Bank of Mobile, or being taken up by the bank?

A. It may have been so; I don't recollect. pp. 248, 249.

Sales of coupons to Duncan, were made by

Bonner, Iselin, Hays,
Plock and Murdock, p. 370 to 381.

Payments in New York, in May and November, 1874.

The coupons had been as matter of custom, paid at the office of Duncan, Sherman & Company, in New York. WILLOUGHBY. p. 224.

Duncan says he told his clerks to inform persons inquiring that they were purchasing. That the transaction was secret is shown by the testimony of the following witnesses, and by the proof of value of the bonds in the New York market.

p. 309.	DUNCAN,
pp. 664, 666.	DOUGHERTY,
p. 685.	THORBURN,
p. 738.	OLIVER.

Boyd testifies he said to bondholders that Duncan, Sherman & Co. were buying coupons. p. 307.

Testimony of Caleb Oliver.

Q. What took place when you presented your coupons to Duncan, Sherman & Co. for payment?

A. I inquired—

(Objected to by Mr. Bangs as incompetent.

(Answer taken subject to objection.)

A. I inquired in the banking house of Duncan, Sherman & Co. if they were paying the coupons of the Mobile and Ohio bonds then that day. I was told they were not paying them there, but were paying them around in Pine street, around the corner; No. 11, I think it was. I then went to No. 11 Pine street, and stepped up to the desk where they were paying something, I don't know what. I inquired if they were paying the coupons of the Mobile and Ohio bonds, and they said they were. I then took my place in line I think, at the time.

Q. And they were paid?

A. They were paid there; yes, sir.

Q. Was anything said when they were paid?

A. No, sir, there was nothing said to me.

Q. And nothing said before you went around to No. 11 Pine street, beyond what you have already testified to?

A. No, sir. pp. 758, 764, 765.

Payment of November Coupons.

LONDON.

DUNCAN, SHERMAN & CO., TO CREDIT FONCIER.

The arrangements for the payment of this coupon, were initiated by the following dispatch to the Credit Foncier of London:

"Will next week cable deposit with you £10,000, and further amounts as advised of purchase of November coupons. Murdock will give details of coupons. Have told Union Bank to refer holders to you."

At the request of Duncan, Sherman & Co., the disclosure of the situation to bondholders was confined to the following:

OFFICE OF DUNCAN, SHERMAN & CO., Bankers,
New York, October 22, 1874.

To the Credit Foncier of England, Limited:

Gentlemen—We have instructed the Union Bank to refer parties holding Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company coupons due 1st November, and presenting the same to them for payment to you, stating that you will purchase the same at their face value.

Simple notice as follows at your coupon desk will be all sufficient:

"Coupons of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, due November 1, 1874, of £6 15s., £6, and £3 each, will be purchased at their full value."

This is sufficient notice to the parties holding the same that the coupons are not paid by the company, which is the position we wish maintained until reimbursed for the advances.

DUNCAN, SHERMAN & CO.

pp. 418, 419.

Testimony of J. H. Webster.

To the third interrogatory, he saith; The Credit Foncier of England, Limited, during the year 1874, became possessed of some coupons issued by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, maturing the first day of November, 1874, and the first day of January, 1875.

To the second cross-interrogatary, he saith: I was not present when the coupons referred to in the last interrogatory were received or paid. I can only state that nothing would transpire on such an occasion beyond the handing over of a ticket by the clerk who received the coupons in exchange for the same when they were left for examination, and that on their respective owners or their agents calling for their money, the said ticket was returned to the clerk, and a check would be handed to the bearer of the ticket, payable to the order of his principals for the face value of the coupons, less income tax. p. 399.

Arrangement between Railroad Company, and Duncan, Sherman & Co.

Testimony of Vice-President.

I was Vice President of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company during 1874, and was not in any other business.

My only connection with the coupons referred to was as Director and Vice President of the company, and my agency in relation to them was confined to efforts in my official capacity to effect some arrangement through Mr. Duncan in New York BY WHICH THE CREDIT OF THE COMPANY COULD BE PROTECTED AGAINST THE DEFAULT OF PAYMENT OF INTEREST COUPONS from resources outside of the resources of the company, which were inadequate to that end. p. 321.

Appropriation of Net Earnings.

Minutes of a meeting of the board of directors, held at Mobile, 28th April, 1874, at which were present, John J. Walker, vice president and president pro tem., Henry Hall, A. Murdock, Wm. D. Dunn, Moses Waring, Wm. H. Pratt and A. J. Gillespie, directors—the following resolution appears :

"Resolved, That the net earnings of the company, after payment of the current expenses, be pledged for repayment of advances obtained by the president for the purpose of meeting the May interest, and that the floating debt in the shape of bills payable, be extended so far as practicable, to next winter, and that credits so extending shall be secured by pledge of consolidated bonds in the hands of Bank of Mobile, or at such other bank or place as may be determined by the vice president, in trust, at the rate of 75 cents." Which stands attested by A. L. Willoughby, secretary. p. 596.

This was on the same day on which Duncan had telegraphed Pratt who was there present—

Duncan & Elliott's Relations of Trust.

William B. Duncan had been a director since 1872. He was president at the time of the above notice of default. pp. 515, 517.

A. F. Elliott became a director in April, 1874, at which time Duncan had become president. p. 517.

Duncan and Elliott were members of the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co. pp. 309, 533.

Duncan, Sherman & Co., were the financial agents of the company. pp. 240, 651, 652, 231.

Duncan was the absolute controller of the financial affairs of the company. pp. 585, 650, 545.

Opinion 1033.

Report of the Directors for the Year 1874, did not appear until April 21st, 1875. This afforded the first information on the subject of the resources of the company for 1874. It showed net earnings amounting to $707,865.04.

It purported to account for the exhaustion of these earnings, and other receipts, as follows:

Interest coupons, matured in 1872 and 1873, not charged or mentioned in report of 1873	$139.296 35
Interest coupons, matured and paid in 1874	197,970 70
Interest paid to secure renewal of Floating Debt, and to prevent proceedings against the company on the part of holders	118,346 97
Paid on account of Floating Debt, to prevent sacrifice of securities belonging to Company	281,948 85
p. 281.	$737,562 87

Reductions of Floating Debt.

Jan. 1, 1874, it amounted to..........	$1,451,147 77
" 1875, it had been reduced to...	1,166,492 19
May 8, 1875, " " ...	820,932 96
Total reduction.................	$631,214 81

Misappropriations of Earnings.

" Office of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Co.,
Mobile, November 5th, 1874.

A special meeting of the Board of Directors of this Company was held this day.

Present, Wm. B. Duncan, President, J. J. Walker, Vice President, Messrs. W. D. Dunn, W. H. Pratt, W. P. Halliday, A. J. Gillespie, M. Waring, A. Foster Elliot.

The Finance Committee submitted a report through their Chairman, the President; which, on motion, was received and ordered to be spread on the minutes.

The Committee to which was referred the question of the Finances of the Company, with power to act, have to report :—First, That continued depression of business during the first nine months of the year 1874, so far diminished the gross receipts, as to render it impossible for the Company to meet to any material extent, its maturing indebtedness. For the same reason, the Company has been unable to pay the interest coupons which have matured since February last. These coupons are now held by the parties who purchased them, and who have demanded and now demand payment therefor. The total net earnings of the Company for said nine months, which by the statement, appear to be between $300,000 and $325,000, have been appropriated to the reimbursement of coupons matured previous to February last, and held by the purchasers and to the payment of the class of claims against the Company which was essential to the preservation of friendly relations with connecting roads, and to reduction of the floating debt. p. 475.

Duncan, Sherman & Co. absorbed earnings of 1874 on the following claims:

On company's Demand Notes	$150,000 00
Interest on same	10,000 00
Interest and commissions on general account	19,245 39
Transfer of acceptances	32,837 63
Sundry items (19)	13,233 18
Loans made in 1873	139,256 00
pp. 286 to 291.	$364,572 20

On May 1, 1875, when the default occurred, Duncan, Sherman & Co. had brought themselves into the company's debt on the book account, $17,363. p. 603.

May Coupons really paid, with earnings of Railroad.

Duncan, Sherman & Co., held for account of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company the following amounts about the time of payment of May coupons of 1874:

April 30,	Sales	$15,000,	Convertible	Bonds	'80,	$12,000
	"	50,000	do.	do.	'80,	40,000
	"	15,000	do.	do.	'80,	12,000
	"	2,000	do.	do.	'80,	1,600
May 30,	"	750				750
	"	25,000			'80,	20,000
p. 290.						$96,350

November Coupons.

MOBILE.

The Mobile and Ohio R. R. Co. deposited to credit of Duncan, Sherman & Co., in Bank of Mobile, the following amounts at the times of payment on November coupons, as appears from account of Duncan, Sherman & Co. :

To Mobile & Ohio R. R. Co.

1874	Warrants Deposited in Bank of Mobile.
Oct. 31 to Nov. 23.	Warrants deposited in Bk. Mobile; No. 4394 for $2,000; No. 4404, 1,620 20	$3.620 20
	4408 for 1,004. No. 4413, 16.257 44	17,261 64
	4440 for 25,003 31. 4482, 2,550 85.	27,554 16
	Warrants deposited in Bk. of Mobile	13,152 53
	do. do "	19,395 00
	Warrants. do. " No. 4495 for $13.026 36 4503 " 5.238 79 4511 " 6,878 87	25,144 02
Dec. 1-8	Warrants deposited in Bk. Mobile. No. 4518. 3,000, No. 4569, $7.916 84	10.916 84
10-12	Warrants Cr. No. 4578, $12,460 78 4584, $9,036 43, 4593. 5,035 89	26.532 80
16-28	Warrants deposited to credit. No. 4625. $11.000, 4638, $7,500	18,000 00
	4651. $10,600, 4658, $5.000, 4666, $3.000	18,600 00
	4669, $2,500, 4675, $12.852 51	15.352 51
	4677, $3,970, 4682, $10,000	13,970 00
30-31	Warrants deposit to credit No. 4691. $20,000, No. 4703, $7000.	27,000 00
p. 291.		$236.999 50

M. & O. Company remitted following moneys to Duncan, Sherman & Co. about the time of payment of November Coupons, as appears from the following account :

DUNCAN, SHERMAN & Co.

1874. To the MOBILE & OHIO R. R. Co.

Oct. 12-19	Warrants 4307, 4311, 4314, 4315, 4335, 4339, 4341, for $2,500 each remitted	$17,500 00
" 20-26	Warrants 4346, 4347, 4349, 4350, 4363, 4374, for $2,500 each, remitted	15,000 00
" 27-30	Warrants No. 4377 for $2,500, No. 4380 for $4,000, No. 4382 for $6,000, 4383 for $5,000, remitted	17,500 00
	p. 291.	$50,000 00

THE NOVEMBER COUPON ACCOUNT OF THE BANK OF MOBILE shows payments of Coupons on the following dates in Mobile :

DUNCAN, SHERMAN & Co.

1874 WITH BANK OF MOBILE, CR.

Nov. 9.	154 coupons at $40 each	$6,160 00
	160 coupons at $40 each	6,400 00
11.	M. & O. R. R. coupons paid to Saturday night, November 7th	39,527 75
	M. & O. R. R. coupons paid to November 9th	8,833 00
	M. & O. R. R. coupons paid to November 16th	4,555 00
12.	Gold coupons paid 10¼ per cent premium on same, $3,607 50-369 77	3,977 27
14.	M. & O. R. R. coupons	1,956 00
17.	do. do.	1,648 00
18.	Gold coupons paid 11 per cent. prem. on same, $1,690 00-$185 90	1,875 90
24.	M. & O. R. R. charged	1,436 00
Nov. 24.	To balance this day.
Dec. 3.	Coupons M. & O. R. R. Co	1,608 50
28.	do. do.	1,015 50
28.	Gold coupons and 12½ per cent. prem. on Gold, $292 50-35.10	327 60

1875.
Jany. 4.	Coupons M. & O. R. R. Co.	3,120 00
8.	do do.	288 00
8.	Gold coupons and 12½ per cent. prem. on gold, $65 00–$8 12	73 12
Feb. 19.	Coupons M. & O. R. R. Co	476 00
	2 gold coupons at $32 50 and gold 14¾ per cent. prem., $65–9 58	74 58
Mch. 8.	20 gold coupons at 32 50, and gold 15 per cent. prem., $650–$97 50	747 50
	6 coupons at $40 each	240 00

p. 567.

Company's identical money used to pay coupons.

COUPON ACCOUNT.

Duncan, Sherman & Company,
In account with
The Bank of Mobile.

Transferred from Individual Ledger	$45,882 45
Deposited by Mobile and Ohio R. R. Co.	2,550 85

p. 567.

Testimony of Owen McMahon.

Q. Who was it provided the means to pay said coupons to the holders, and who reimbursed the bank for the amount paid for taking them up?

A. Duncan, Sherman & Company provided the money; the Mobile and Ohio Railroad provided some; they deposited in 1874 some forty-five thousand eight hundred dollars to the credit of Duncan, Sherman & Company. p. 214.

Q. Explain item, "November 13, by transferred from individual ledger, $45,885.45."

A. That was an amount standing on the individual ledger to the credit of Duncan, Sherman & Company, deposited by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, and transferred erroneously by the book-keeper to the coupon account on the general ledger. The amounts should have been held subject to the drafts of Duncan, Sherman & Company, of New Orleans. The error was corrected in the accounts sent to Duncan, Sherman & Company. p. 564.

Duncan bought claims against company in 1874 and paid them to himself.

Testimony of J. H. Masson.

Q. To whom or to what party or parties did you trade or sell this paper in so reducing your line?

A. I sold a great deal of that paper to the brokers here. I believe I traded and sold some in New York; I believe I traded some with Mr. Duncan. I traded or exchanged it with the brokers whenever I could. I was about eighteen months handling that paper.

Q. How much of that paper did you sell or trade Mr. Duncan?

A. I exchanged twenty-five thousand dollars of the paper for twenty-five thousand Mobile County Bonds.

Q. When was that?

A. I think it was some time about the middle of 1874.

Q. Did the paper that you traded with Mr. Duncan for these County Bonds bear the endorsement of your bank?

A. No, it was exchanged for the bonds on its own merits. We never endorsed any railroad paper.

Q. Do you know what specific pieces of paper you traded for the bonds?

A. I don't think I could show. I think there is no record on my books. The denomination of the paper was somewhere in the neighborhood of $37,000, I think.

Cross-examined by Mr. Stewart:

Q. I understand you to state that you exchanged with Mr. Duncan about $25,000 of paper for a like amount of county bonds?

A. Yes.

Q. What is your recollection of the then market value of Mobile County Bonds?

A. It's pretty hard to recollect. I suppose nominally 80 or 90 cents. The paper also sold at depreciated value. We considered it about an even exchange.

A. I am pretty well satisfied the railroad had nothing to do with them; for Mr. Duncan's agent had tried to sell them to me a long time before. They were a lot of fifty bonds of one issue that had been in the hands of Duncan, Sherman & Co. for years. p. 486.

Duncan was interested in concealing knowledge of the company's condition, so that he might market his 9000 shares of stock. (Duncan, p. 621 to 623.)

The following correspondence shows that it would have conflicted with the stock speculation on foot, to have allowed knowledge of non-payment of first mortgage interest to become public.

Mobile, February 12, 1874.

Wm. B. Duncan, Duncan, Sherman & Co.:

Received yours. Papers for stock exchange were left with chairman of committee. Bonner introduced me to him and knows all about it (Signed) A. MURDOCK, President.

Wm. Butler Duncan, Esq.:

Dear Sir—By the mail, Mr. Beers sends you the papers asked for in your favor of February 25th, for application to stock exchange.

The name of the registrar is left blank for you to fill up, as I have forgotten the given name of Mr. Hays or the bank he represents. There is also wanting a letter to registrar, asking him to furnish the amount of stock registered; please ask Col. Walker to address Mr. Hays the necessary note. We have, of course, been rather busy in getting up an elaborate and accurate statement, and one which I think will meet your expectations. We are pressing the mortgage as fast as possible; the recording in all the counties in the four States is a job, but we are pushing it vigorously, and will send it to you at the earliest moment.

(Signed) A. MURDOCK.

Stock, of which there is little on the market, is gradually improving, and I am told is quoted at 23—no quantity could be purchased at that. The papers necessary to put it on the stock board are sent you some days, and I hope were found complete. As the planting season is upon us, business of course falls off; but the energy being used for a greater production along the line, was never so great, while immigration is looking towards us more than ever before: Our agents are now in the counties getting the mortgages recorded.

(Signed) A. MURDOCK.

MARCH 21, 1874.

Wm. Butler Duncan, Esq.:

Dear Sir—There is a strong disposition to invest in our stock here. There are those here, and along the line, who have idle means to a greater or less extent, who regard the stock as a good investment. A day or two since a gentleman came here from the interior. with the money to purchase 50 shares at 25; he got it at 21½, and told me he should have given the 25. Orders went from here yesterday, through a broker, to purchase in New York at 22½, what amount I do not know.

There is none of consequence offered here, and if the slightest activity, or inquiry in New York for the stock, it would advance at once. I am told that convertible bonds have been quoted from New York to our brokers here at 92½. If the stock was advanced, of course the bonds would follow. Not knowing your plans, I am saying and doing nothing, only to say that the stock is worth more than it is selling for. Your Mr. Sherman will be with you before this reaches, and from him you will learn of the destructive floods of rain in our section. Our line was exempt from the almost general damage, and the only loss to us is the difficulty of getting to and from our stations, and consequent loss of business.

(Signed) A. MURDOCK.

MARCH 5, 1874.

We desire to interest, to answer definitely, On the points inquired of, I infer from what I hear from Mobile that you are halting in your policy of requiring your creditors to extend your notes, as if your were certain that the negotiations I am endeavoring to make for the company were already successful. This is not so, nor can I make much progress until I receive the facts which will enable me to obtain a quotation for our stock upon the stock exchange; in the meantime, all the resources of the company should be husbanded for a purpose of paying the interest due in May. The company is still indebted to myself and others for some $200,000, advanced to pay November, 1873, and January and March, 1874, interest, and this amount should be reimbursed if the company expect to obtain assistance in paying the May interest. Can you not make further remittances out of your receipts?

(Signed) WM. BUTLER DUNCAN.
p. 652.

At this time Duncan, Sherman & Co. held $210,000, and owned $96,000 of convertible bonds, exchangeable by their terms into stock. Hays, Bonner, and others named in the correspondence had just taken convertible bonds at eighty cents on the dollar. p. 509.

Bondholders who purchased after May and November, 1874, had no knowledge of the transactions at those times.

M. PHILLIPI, a witness called for objecting bondholders, sworn, testifies in response to questions by Mr. Andrews :

Q. Have you purchased Mobile and Ohio Railroad Sterling Bonds since November 1, 1874, since or May 1, 1874?

A. I have no recollection ; perhaps I might tell by looking at my books. I have looked at my books, and find I have purchased since 1874.

Q. Did the bonds which you purchased have attached to them the coupons of May and November, 1874?

A. No, I don't think they had any attached of 1874 at the time I purchased, which was March, 1875. p. 560.

H. F. WILSON, a witness summoned in behalf of objecting bondholders, and sworn, testifies as follows :

Q. Did you purchase any First Mortgage Sterling Bonds Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company since November, 1, 1874?

A. Not on my own account.

Q. Then you did on account of others?

A. I acted as broker.

Q. Did those bonds have the coupons of May and November, 1874, attached?

A. As a rule I think they had all the coupons that were in default.

Q. About when did you purchase them?

A. I could not tell without looking at my books.

Q. What do you mean by saying that the bonds had all the coupons which were in default attached?

A. I mean that the unpaid coupons since the road ceased to pay interest were attached.

Q. What was the last coupon attached to the bonds?

A. I think it was May, 1875.

By Mr. Stewart:

Q. You don't know who paid the coupons of 1874, or under what circumstance they were paid?

A. No, I do not. p. 561.

O. F. CAWTHON, being sworn, examined by E. L. Andrews on behalf of L. J. Belloni, objector.

Q. You purchased Mobile and Ohio Railroad sterling bonds subsequent to November 1, 1874?

A. Yes.

Q. You recollect about what time in November?

A. I could not give specific dates.

Q. Have you purchased any subsequent to November, 1874?

A. Yes.

Q. Were the coupons which fell due on May 1 and November 1, 1874, attached to those bonds which you purchased after November 1, 1874?

A. My recollection is that they were not.

Q. Did you purchase any of those bonds on account of other persons?

A. Yes. p. 573.

Custom as to purchases of bonds after public default.

Q. Were there coupons falling due November 1, 1874, attached to the bonds you purchased after that date, or any of them?

A. There were not.

Q. Were there coupons falling due the 1st May, 1875, attached to the bonds you purchased after that date, or any of them?

A. In a single transaction that I have an account of they were not attached.

Q. Did it make any difference in the price, the circumstance of coupons not being attached after the 1st day of May, 1875?

A. Yes, sir; it did.

Q. What?

A. I can't tell you exactly.

Q. Were the coupons attached to the bonds you purchased after the 1st May, 1875?

A. They were, unless by special contract.

Q. I mean the ordinary purchases?

A. When I paid the regular price they were. If I bought them ex-coupon, we had to agree upon what we would allow for the coupon, either 4 per cent., or whatever the coupon would be worth.

Q. What made you say, then, that the market generally was ignorant, if you cannot name a single person?

A. Well, my reason for that is, that when a bond is in default the market knows it, and trades upon that basis; I should have known it myself.

Q. How did you acquire the knowledge of the default?

Mr. Bangs. In 1874.

Mr. Blandy. In May, 1875.

Witness. From the fact that in trading in the bonds they carried coupons that were due May 1875.

Q. Of course, if those coupons had been paid, they would not have been attached to the bonds, would they?

A. That is what I think about it; it would have been a matter of course to me.

Q. So that bonds cannot be sold after a default had taken place in the payment of interest, unless the coupons go with them.

A. Not to be a regular delivery.

Q. What do you mean by "to be a regular delivery?"

A. I mean to say, if nothing is said about the default. If I sell you $10,000 of bonds, and nothing is said about what coupon it carries, you are entitled to all unpaid coupons.

Q. By Mr. Blandy. As well matured, as those to mature?

A. Yes, sir. pp. 665, 677, 701.

Moran's purchases in 1874.

Charles E. Thorburn, testifies: I have spoken to Mr. Duncan prior to this about the condition of the road, and the chance of paying the interest. I was sent by Mr. Moran once to see him; and Mr. Moran sent me to Mr. Duncan and I had a conversation. It was in reference to the purchase of some bonds for a correspondent of Mr. Moran's, in Europe. I went to see Mr. Duncan. I can't tell you whether it was in May, 1874, or November, 1874, but it was during the year 1874; and on the strength of that conversation I suggested—

Mr. Bangs—No matter about the "strength" of that conversation.

Witness—You want to get at it?

Mr. Bangs—I do not want to get at it. I asked you a question and you have not answered it yet.

Witness—If you wanted to find out about the road, I will tell you all about it; all the conversations.

Mr. Bangs—Go ahead. Nobody has interrupted you in stating the conversations.

Witness—All right. This thing is coming back clear to me now. Mr. Moran sent me to see Mr. Duncan and I went to see him. I asked Mr. Duncan in reference to the condition of the road as an investment for the other side. Mr. Duncan told me that he thought the bonds were good; stated that their house was largely interested in the success of the road; and so I reported to Mr. Moran.

Q. Do you mean to say that you told Mr. Duncan or any body else, that you were acting for Mr. Moran?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did tell him that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are sure of that?

A. I told him that I came from Mr. Moran, yes.

Q. Mr. Duncan told you they were largely interested in the road, did he?

A. He said they were largely interested in the road.

Q. Did he tell you the nature of the interest?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that?

A. Positive.

Q. Are you sure that he did not tell you that they had bought the coupons of May, 1874, and were largely interested in that way?

A. I am positive of that, because Mr. Moran would not have bought the bonds if he had known that.

By Mr. Blandy:

Q. What is the exact date?

A. It is May 21, 1874.

By Mr. Bangs :

Q. What were the purchases that were made on the strength of the information obtained from Mr. Duncan?

A. I bought 5,000 bonds at 81 from McGinnes Brothers & Fearing. Mr. Moran saw Mr. Duncan himself also before the purchase of the bonds.

Q. Is that what you mean by the payment ?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. About the time it fell due ?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it before or after ?

A. It was before.

Q. Had you told this to Mr. Moran ?

Q. When was your next purchase after the 21st of May ?

A. The 15th of July.

Q. For Mr. Moran ?

A. For Mr. Moran ; 1874.

Q. Was Mr. Moran the holder of bonds on the 21st of May, 1874 ?

A. I believe so.

Q. Will you just take up the conversation that you were relating, between yourself and Mr. Duncan, and give us your reasons why you are satisfied Mr. Duncan did not tell you that his firm had taken up the coupons of May 1st, 1874 ?

A. Mr. Duncan stated to me that the road was doing very well, and he spoke very well of the road, and I repeated the conversation to Mr. Moran ; and Mr. Moran invested in the bonds, as I understood it, on the strength of that conversation.

Q. On the strength of that conversation ?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the strength of your report of it, did he ?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you reported to Mr. Moran, in substance, what Mr. Duncan had stated to you.

W. B. Duncan, testifies:

Q. You heard his testimony, and heard what he stated took place between you and him at the time, did you not?

A. I did.

Q. Do you wish to be understood as denying that any such conversation took place?

A. Denying the unqualified character of the conversation.

Q. What is your denial based upon?

A. That it was not my habit to make any such unqualified statements as he claims I there made.

Q. But it is not based upon any distinct recollection of the interview with Mr. Thorburn?

A. No; except that I deny that he has a better recollection of it than I would have. pp. 719, 721, 788, 796.

MASTER'S REPORT.

The question appears to be, whether or not the coupons of 1st May and 1st November aforesaid were extinguished by the sums paid to the holders for them, so as to be no longer securities protected by the first mortgage, or whether they stand in claimant's hands as uncancelled, with all the rights of the mortgage, and as all other coupons due and unpaid.

It is in evidence and admitted that the former holders of said coupons have been satisfied and have no further claim, having received the money coming to them for the same.

The evidence shows that the coupons of 1874, are held uncancelled by Alexander Duncan, and were proved by him before the Master as his property. The question, however, seems to be as to the nature and effect of the mode and manner of payment.

As to the mode and manner the evidence is very complete.

For instance, the coupon-holders who presented them for payment at the company's offices in Mobile, were handed back their coupons after they had been verified or counted by the treasurer or his assistant, and placed in envelopes endorsed with memoranda of the number and amounts, and the holders were told to take them to the Bank of Mobile where they would be paid. On presentation at said bank to the teller, the coupons were retained by the bank officer and the bank's cheques or money was given for them. The mode and manner of payment in London and New York was not the usual mode. In London the coupons for May, 1874, were taken up on instructions from Duncan, Sherman & Co. by the Union Bank, and for November by the Credit Foncier. In New York the evidence is that they were not paid in the usual manner, and that the holders were informed that they were being purchased and held uncancelled.

It is in proof that the railroad company did not pay them, and supplied no money for their payment. The May and November interest for 1874, on first mortgage Bonds, stands on the company's books as unpaid and in default. It does not appear that the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company paid one of those coupons, or that it intended to do so.

It is shown by evidence that the money to take up said coupons was furnished by Duncan, Sherman & Co., out of their own moneys, or from funds furnished by Alexander Duncan and others.

The proof is full as to the intent of Duncan, Sherman & Co., and their agents—the Bank of Mobile, Credit Foncier, &c., with the assent of the company, not to pay or satisfy said coupons so as to extinguish them; but on the contrary, their plainly expressed intention was that they should be purchased and remain uncancelled with all the rights that purchasers would have. Their taking up the coupons without extinguishment was with the consent of the company, by the express agreement with its officers that they were to be purchased with all lien rights as existing mortgage security preserved and held until the company could pay them.

It is not shown in evidence that in any instance the company or its officers retained possession of any of these coupons, but they were received from the parties presenting them, by Duncan, Sherman & Co.'s purchasing agents. There is no proof that they have ever been in the possession of the company since the original holders received the money for them and surrendered them to said agencies.

Evidence was adduced to show that a portion of the original owners did not know that the company was not paying. It appears that some did not know and did not inquire. Others did and were fully informed. Payment was not made at the treasurer's counter as usual. It appears that all who inquired were informed of the nature of the payment. There was evidence to show that a written notice was posted up in view in the treasurer's office. The evidence is full that the purchasing agencies and the officers of the company fully understood the transaction. Evidence offered to show that the matter was kept secret, failed.

The Master conceives that the question does not depend on the fact whether the parties receiving payment, knew who made it. It seems that it is immaterial to the inquiry. The debtor company consented to the transaction, and the party paying did not intend to extinguish the security, which was a negotiable paper passing by delivery. It is sufficient that the parties most interested, viz: the company owing and the party paying the debt, both concurred in the expressed intent that the coupons should be held as a valid subsisting lien, to make it so in this case. It certainly could not have been intended that the lien should be destroyed. The evidence in the shape of telegrams, correspondence and instructions passing between Duncan, Sherman & Company and their agencies in taking up the coupons, and with the officers of the company, prior to the maturity of the coupons, seems to the Master to be conclusive as to the intention to preserve the lien, which intention should govern this case.

There was evidence to show that the company could have paid the coupons, if it would, in preference to other debts which were paid, some of which were unsecured. The Master is of the opinion that it is immaterial whether the company, by better management, could have paid or not. So long as the company, by its own officers, was in possession of its property and income, although subject to be taken possession of by the trustees, and although it may appear that it did pay inferior debts, that is not a matter material and should not be allowed to affect the rights of the claimant.

It is undeniable that the defendant corporation did not pay this debt. The coupon-holders received the money, but it was not the money of the company whose books fail to show the payment of one first mortgage coupon of May and November, 1874, or since those dates. It was claimant's money which purchased the coupons for full value, and he holds them uncancelled with all the rights and liens of the bonds from which they were taken.

The Master therefore finds and reports to the court that the claim of Alexander Duncan for the detached coupons of 1874, which has been objected to on this reference, is a just and lawful claim, and should be allowed with interest from the time or times when due, as a valid subsisting lien of the same force and effect as other coupons of the first mortgage unpaid, with all the liens applicable to said mortgage. p. 165.

DECREE.

1. That the reports submitted by the Master under the orders and directions to him are confirmed, and all the exceptions to the same are overruled.

2. The Court declares and decrees the deed of trust described in the bill executed by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, dated the 1st of November, 1853, and appointing John J. Palmer, William R. Hallet, and Morris Ketchum, the survivors and successors of them, as trustees, is a valid conveyance of the railroad of the said corporation, and of all the property therein mentioned, for the security of the uniform series of first mortgage bonds, and the interest to accrue thereon, therein set forth, and that the said bonds and coupons, including the coupons which became due on the 1st of May and November, 1874, represented as owned by Alexander Duncan, are secured equally and to be ratably paid from the proceeds of the property without priority or preference among them.

3. The Court declares and decrees there was a default on the part of the corporation aforesaid in the payment of the instalments of interest promised to be paid in May, 1874, also in November, 1874, and successively in May and November since that date, and that a title accrued to the trustees under the said deed therefrom to enter into possession of the property and to obtain a decree for the sale of property therein described to be enforced unless the said corporation shall pay the debt which has been ascertained to be due on the said deed of trust by the Master's report in this cause.

7. The Court orders and decrees that the Masters may receive in payment from the highest and last bidder, bonds and coupons which form a part of the first mortgage debt ascertained to be due or owing, by the Master in his report, and sustained by the opinion of the Court, provided, however, that a sum sufficient to pay the costs, charges and expenses of the trust as above mentioned, whether exceeding the said cash deposit or not, and also to provide for the payment of the pro rata dividend which shall be due or owing to the owners of other bonds and coupons, secured under the deed of trust, must be paid in money.

And provided, also, that if the said mortgaged property shall be bid off, directly or indirectly, for or in behalf of the bondholders and creditors who have or shall have entered into and subscribed the agreement for the re-adjustment of the securities of said company dated October 1st, 1876, commonly called the agreement of re-organization, then in that case all and every bondholder and creditor of said company, not having already entered into and subscribed the said agreement, who shall, on or before the 1st day of September, 1877 next, enter into and subscribe the same and deposit their securities with the Farmer's Loan and Trust Company in the City of New York, or with the Bank of Mobile in the City of Mobile, as provided by said agreement, shall be and they are hereby allowed to participate in said bid and purchase on the same terms and on equal footing in all respects according to the character of their claims respectively with the said bondholders and creditors who have heretofore entered into and signed said agreement.

9. The court orders and decrees: that it appearing to the court that there is a clause in the deed of trust or mortgage described in the bill, saving and reserving the rights and liens that may attach to the roadway and construction thereon in favor of the State of Tennessee, which will exist and attach as a prior lien by statutes of that State, in the event of said State aiding in the construction of the railroad of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, in that State, being a distance of one hundred and eighteen (118) miles, and it appearing that there was such aid, and a claim for a prior lien under the statutes in Tennessee, is the subject of controversy in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee, and the parties asserting such prior lien are not before this court, and this claim cannot be settled here.

The court orders, that the sale to be made under this decree be subject to the rights and liens which exists, if any, under the statutes of the State of Tennessee, or in favor of the State of Tennessee, its grantees, or assigns, or the parties asserting such prior lien in so far as the railroad and property effected by that lien are concerned. p. 1041.

ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

First. The Court should not have decreed that there was a default on the part of the corporation in the payment of the instalments of interest promised to be paid in May, 1874, and in November, 1874; but the Court should have decreed that there was not a default on the part of the corporation in the payment of the aforesaid instalments of interest to the bondholders secured by the first mortgage.

Second. The Court should not have decreed that the coupons which became due on the 1st of May, and November, 1874, represented as owned by Alexander Duncan are secured equally and to be ratably paid from the proceeds of the property with the bonds under the mortgage to Morris Ketchum and others, but the Court should have decreed that the said coupons should not be paid out of the proceeds of the property until after the payment of the aforesaid bonds, and are not secured ratably with the bonds.

Third. The Court should have declared and decreed that the first mortgage bondholders with the exceptions proven had not sold their coupons.

Fourth. The Court should have decreed that Duncan, Sherman & Co., and their assignees, were estopped from claiming the said coupons as first mortgage liens.

Fifth. The Court should have decreed that on the marshalling of the assets the said coupons were paid to Duncan, Sherman & Co., and Alexander Duncan.

Sixth. The Court should have decreed that the said coupons were paid by the equitable appropriation of the earnings and assets of the corporation.

Seventh. That the Masters should not have been directed to receive on the sale any commodity, such as bonds, in lieu of lawful money, except by consent of all the cestuis que trust represented before the court, or for the equal benefit of all the bondholders, according to their holdings.

Eighth. That the Masters should have been directed not to receive the bond bid, except for the amount of the foreclosing mortgage or some other reasonable amount, as a minimum upset price, in order that the bondholders not desirous of becoming purchasers of the property might not be deprived of all substantial share of the proceeds of the sale by a nominal bid, under the terms of this decree.

Ninth. That the Master should have been directed not to receive bonds, in lieu of cash, for any greater value than the dividends such bonds would be entitled to receive from the proceeds of sale. They should not have been directed to be received at their face value under the decree allowing the use of bonds as bid-money.

Tenth. That a trustee should have been ordered to bid for the property for the benefit of all the bondholders alike, to the amount of the mortgage ascertained, payable in bonds, as the equitable measure of securing the bondholders.

Eleventh. That the time for participation by all the first mortgage bondholders in the bond-bid should not have been limited to a shorter period than the time necessary to prosecute an appeal to the Supreme Court, so that the appellants might not, by exercising their right of appeal, lose even those equities secured to them by the decree, in order to provide for their unquestioned interests in the property.

ARGUMENT on the COUPON CLAIMS.

These claims, to the amount of $535,000, are asserted to be subsisting liens under the first mortgage, upon the following grounds :

First.—That they hold the liens of the mortgage by virtue of subrogation.

Second.—By purchase from the first mortgage bondholders.

Neither of these positions ao ~~were~~ sustained by the Circuit Court, but the coupons were decided to be subsisting liens under the first mortgage, upon another theory stated in the opinion.

We will first consider the grounds advanced on behalf of the claimant, and then the doctrine declared at Circuit.

Duncan, Sherman & Co. did not acquire the liens of the First Mortgage on the Coupons of 1874 under the Doctrine of Subrogation.

The principle of subrogation was invoked upon two grounds:

First.—As a conventional subrogation, namely, an agreement of the debtor, without the knowledge of the bondholder, with the party advancing the money to pay the coupons that he should hold them with the same rights that the bondholder had. This is claimed, though such party had sustained no previous relation with the security or with any of the parties interested therein. This was the theory asserted and defeated in the earliest litigations on the subject of detached coupons. It was adopted by the Master in this cause.

The doctrine is said to be derived from the civil law, but no right of subrogation, as matter of law, can be sustained under the equity system of jurisprudence on behalf of a stranger or any one except a party secondarily liable as a surety or a subsequent incumbrancer.

It would be destructive of a mortgage security that the holder of a bond, with a coupon attached, may be deprived of his lien for the coupon by secret arrangement between the debtor and a third party, without his knowledge, so that the pretended payment of the interest represented by the coupon is converted into a mere loan to be deducted eventually from the mortgage security. It is well perhaps that this question should be first presented in this discussion, because it clearly illustrates the entire theory of the claimants in this case.

It must be conceded, as a fundamental proposition, that a creditor can ~~refuse payment~~

~~from any person except the~~ debtor. He can insist upon such a payment as would extinguish the obligation, to wit, the coupon due. Any other theory would be destructive of the rights of a mortgagee. If he could be forced to accept an interest payment from any other person than the debtor, without the extinguishment of the coupon, as a first mortgage lien, he would be subjected to the loss of the most important right inherent in his mortgage, namely, the right to seize and impound the security upon the failure of the debtor to comply with the terms of the contract. What are those terms? To pay the interest as it accrues—to pay it, and, of course, that means to extinguish it. If the debtor is unable to extinguish the coupon, so that it no longer remains a part of the mortgage entitled to share in the security on a par with the owner of the principal indebtedness, the right of foreclosure accrues. The bondholder cannot be compelled to assign his coupon so that it may remain a lien co-equal with the principal indebtedness. But what he cannot be forced to do against the terms of the contract it is can claimed be obtained without his knowledge by a legal implication. If the debtor can, by any secret arrangement with any third person, and without the knowledge of the creditor, assign his interest in the mortgage, so that this third party becomes the owner of an aliquot share of his security, the result follows; first, that under the fraudulent pretence of payment, there is mere loan to the mortgage creditor, which he must repay out of his security; secondly, that he is deprived of the inherent and important right by this interposition of realizing on the mortgage security. Such an arrangement, if it can be legally enacted once, may be repeated ad infinitum, so that when the mortgage creditor does not finally receive any interest payment, and proceeds to enforce his mortgage, his position has been varied, as follows, without his knowledge; Instead of holding a mortgage, say for $6,000,000, the principal of the mortgage in this case, he will find that he has only an aliquot interest in a mortgage to the amount of $12,000,000. This pretence is utterly at war with the nature of interest payments, as a product of principal. To obtain that interest is the very object of the bondholder's investment.

The theory of a railroad bond is security for principal and receipt of interest revenues. The security is regarded as ample for the interest as it becomes due, and the principal as it becomes due. Under this mortgage it is held at Circuit that they both become payable on the enforcement of one instalment of over due interest. But it is not contemplated by the investors that the realization of their security, is to ~~stand~~ be retarded until it becomes encumbered by infinite duplications of interest. Such a variation from the contract and the mortgage security requires their most explicit consent. It cannot be obtained by any species of subrogation known to our law as illustrated by the following authorities. It will be observed that the effort of the coupon claimants in these cases, is an attempt to apply to coupons the familiar principle by which a mortgage debtor can keep alive as against himself and his interest in the property a lien which he has paid off with money loaned him for that purpose. This is not as against other encumbrances, but only as against the mortgagor, on the ground that the mortgage is a good muniment of title as against him, which he should not be equitably permitted to dispute. He might have executed a new mortgage to the lender, and so he may use the old one, and it is good in the hands of the holder, as against the debtor, and those deriving under him.

In an Ohio case where the most elaborate examination of the point was had, the Court said:

"It appears that the consideration of the debt for which the defendant Hilliard recovered a judgment was for moneys advanced in payment of interest and taxes, and the right of way. This, it has been suggested, gives him an equitable claim as against the mortgages. The directors may acquire~~d~~ property for the use of the road. This may be done from the earnings of the road, and with money borrowed, and on credit. But the property acquired becomes the property of the company, and thereupon subject to the mortgages under the construction we have felt bound to give to the statute. Those who advanced money on credit to the directors of the company, are bound to take notice of the claim which will arise under the mortgages, which are required by law to be recorded in each of the counties through which the road passes. If they part with their money or property without taking security, we know of no principle upon which one could be created for their benefit. We are not inclined to exempt the company or the mortgagees from the application of any rule of law which would properly apply to the dealings between them, or to the property which is the subject of these dealings, and which would secure or protect the just claim of third persons. But we are bound to respect the claims of the mortgages, and do not feel authorized to modify the settled rules of law which govern the dealings of third persons with the directors of a company, so as to impair that security which the mortgagees, under the terms of a contract authorized by law have obtained."

Coe vs. Columbus, Piqua & Indiana Railway Co., 10 Ohio State Reports, 404.

In Maryland, the question was thus treated:

"They neither sought nor received any assignment of their liens from the parties whom they paid, nor any assent from them that their coupons should be so treated after payment as to the remainder of the lien in preference to those subsequently falling due. Mere payment to these creditors created no such assignment, and mere silent receipt of money due them, furnishes no ground for presuming any such assent."

The Commonwealth vs. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Co., 32 Maryland, p. 545.

In the following Vermont case, the claimant who had acquired possession of the coupons through the railroad company, as in the Ohio case, was allowed a share of the fund only, because there was ample for the bonds, and a sufficiency remaining to satisfy him without interfering with the superior equities of the bondholders.

"A Court of Equity will not convert a payment into a purchase in favor of a party advancing the money, when there is a superior countervailing equity in another person."

"If this mortgage is redeemed, it is no prejudice to them (first mortgage bondholders) to have these coupons allowed, as they will get their whole debt."

"But if it is not redeemed it does not appear, nor is it claimed in argument that the property is insufficient in value to pay the whole of this first mortgage debt, including these coupons."

Miller v. Rutland R. R., 40 Vt., p. 408.

The following was a case of conceded assignment of the coupons, the only question being as to the construction of orders of Court, for their payment.

Petition for holders of coupons, which had been sold by bondholders, as to distribution of funds in hands of receivers.

The coupons were sold long after fund was in the hands of receivers, when payments were being made under orders of Court on account of the coupons, as they became due. Held, that the coupons without regard to their holders, were payable according to the orders of Court, on faith of which they were bought.

Sewell v. Brainerd, 38 Vermont, 373.

In a late case decided by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, the principle is adhered to that the bondholder has the superior equity. But as there were funds enough to pay all claimants, and the coupons were declared payable, as against the company.

"It is true, that the person who presented the coupons at the counting-room of the company, had no intention of assigning them to any party, and understood that they were paid and extinguished in the usual and regular course of business. But as between Kimball and the company itself, it was understood that they were not extinguished, and that he had taken the place of the persons who had presented them for payment. As between him and the company, this was an allowable agreement, and a legitimate mode of furnishing pecuniary aid to the company, changing the form, but not increasing the amount of its actual debt."

"The only parties who could have any right to object to this proceeding, would be the other creditors of the company, to protect whose rights the mortgage was given. If the security had proved insufficient to pay the entire debt, the other mortgage creditors might say that, when the coupons of July 1st, 1856, were given up, they were understood to be paid and cancelled; that they were presented to the treasurer at the usual place and in the usual manner for payment, and not for assignment; and that Kimball, having taken part in a transaction which appeared, and was understood to be a payment, is estopped now to come forward as a purchaser and assignee, and thereby diminish the dividend which the other creditors, whose claims were covered by the mortgage, were entitled to receive."

Haven v. Grand Junction R. R., 109 Mass., p. 96.

The Court of Appeals of New York, as late as 1875, decided a cause involving this principle. The decree contains a review of the authorities, and concludes with a unanimous affirmance of the decisions of the referee and of the Supreme Court, disallowing the claim of the coupon holder, to deprive the bond holders of a part of their security. As we rely strongly on the enforcement of the doctrines of this case to its systematic and logical results, we quote the referee's findings:

"I do further report, that in my opinion, the claim of the said A. Y. Smith should be disallowed; that he made a private agreement with the president of said company to advance the money for said coupons, with an agreement that he should hold the coupons as a claim against the company, as a loan of money to pay the same; that the holders of the bonds were not aware of any such arrangement, and that the moneys so advanced to the company cannot constitute any claim upon the mortgage property, precedent to, or of equal extent with, the bonds, but must be subject to the lien of the bondholders."

Opinion of the N. Y. Court of Appeals.

" Here the holders of the coupons did not agree to assign, or transfer them to Smith, and did not in fact do so. When they delivered these coupons to the Trust Company, they supposed they were receiving payment of them, and Smith undoubtedly knew this. He, however, intended to take and hold them and keep them in being as his security for the money advanced. This he could do, as against the Railway Company ; and, as against it, the mortgage could be enforced for his benefit. It has not paid the coupons, was in no way harmed by their payment by Smith, and he advanced the money for its benefit upon the request of its principal officer.

But a different rule applies as between Smith and the bondholders. They had a direct interest in having the coupons paid so as to preserve the value of their security. They delivered them up to the Trust Company for payment, and supposed they were paid. If they had known the true state of the case, they might, and probably would have, refused to assign the coupons, and to have kept them in life, and thus, by an accumulation of interest, to have impaired the value of their security. And they could have caused a foreclosure of the mortgage for default in the payment of interest."

Union Trust Company against The Port Jervis Railway Company, 63 New York, page 311.

The elaboration of the principles involved can be found in Court of Appeals Cases, 1875, vol. 32, No. 369.

It was said by the appellees that a decision of Judge Blatchford contravened this line of authorities. An inspection of that opinion will show that a totally different question was involved in the case referred to.

A part of a series of coupons had been paid, and the question was whether the rest of the same series falling due at the same date should be paid in such manner out of the proceeds of the estate, as to put them on an equality with their fellow coupons. Extracts from the judgment will show that its features are totally different from the case at bar.
~~Jessie 13 a~~

"The bill in this case sets forth, that the debtor made default on the 1st of July, 1873, in the payment of the coupons which became due on that day, and has never paid any of such coupons.

"As the bill is filed by the trustees under the mortgage who represent the bondholders, I think this averment in the bill is properly to be taken as against the bondholders, as an averment that the coupons which fell due July 1, 1873, were presented and payment of them demanded, and refused, and thus default was made, inasmuch as every bond with coupons attached to it provides that the interest is payable upon presentation of the coupons.

"In support of the preference claimed it is contended, that as to the interest which matured at any given time on and prior to July 1st, 1873, inasmuch as some of the parties entitled to receive such interest received it from the debtors, and some did not, the former will have received a preference unless the latter are now to be put on an equal footing with them.

"Certainly there is nothing in those words, or elsewhere in the mortgage, that forbids a course which is absolutely necessary, unless a result is to be effected which will not be a payment of interest according to the tenor of the bonds, but will leave some part of a given installment of interest paid in full, and the rest of it not paid in full.

"I do not see how any diligence, of those of a given class who were paid their interest, in asking to have it paid can be imputed as laches to others of the same class who did not ask to be paid their interest, so as to work a virtual preference in favor of the former.

"To give to the latter their interest in full before paying the principal of the bonds, is only to put all those in a given class entitled to interest on an equal footing; and to put them on such equal footing requires, also, that interest maturing at an earlier date shall be paid before interest maturing at a later date.

"Here are special equities, it seems to me, which would be violated, if such an inequality were left to exist as the exclusion from the full payment of interest of some of a given class.

"No case was cited on the argument which decides the above question adversely to the view I take.

"Most of the cases cited were not cases of coupons or interest on numerous bonds secured by mortgage, and none of them were cases where some interest in a given class had been paid, and the rest not paid, and the funds insufficient to pay all the principal and interest due.

"The case of Sewell v. Brainerd (38 Vermont, 364) was not such a case, nor was the case of Miller v. Rutland and Washington R. R. Co., (40 Vermont, 399); and in the latter case no preference was claimed.

The above views cover all the questions involved,

"But as to the holders of the unpaid coupons of July 1st, 1873, there seems to me to be a special equity.

"It was through the advance of money to cash those coupons in the hands of the holders of the bonds to whom they belonged, that such holders obtained the money for those coupons. On such advance those coupons passed into the hands of those who now hold them.

"Those who had their coupons of July 1st, 1873, cashed by means of such advance, retained the money, and to permit them now to exclude the holders of such coupons from being paid in full and put on an equality with the registered interest of July 1st, 1873, which was paid in full, would be to permit them to work an inequality which would be unjust."

The result of the authorities is that the bondholders who detached their coupons for payment, and as against whom, in the language of the opinion in this case, purchase of their coupons is prejudicial—are held to have "a Superior Equity" over coupons that they had not specially assigned.

The elements of the doctrine invoked in the above causes to sustain the coupon claims, and overruled by their decision, pervades another class of cases which have also been decided adversely to the claimants, and by this Court.

We refer to claims of material men, who have sought in the absence of statutory liens, and merely on claims of equity to attach their advances against the property, as a mortgage incumbrance.

Dennistown a. Chicago R. R., 4 Bissell, p. 414.

Even where there was a contract for the lien by two trustees of the mortgage, claiming to act under the covenants of the deed the claim was denied.

Dillon a. Barnard, 21 Wall, 430.
Galveston R. R. a. Cowdrey, 93 U. S., p. 352.

A decision made in this Mobile and Ohio case is in point, if the claim of Alexander Duncan is not sustained by an assignment of the coupons from their original owners, but merely upon an alleged equity to a subrogation.

Duncan, et al., vs. The Mobile & Ohio R. R. Co., 2 Woods.

The claim to this conventional subrogation is overruled in the opinion of the Circuit Court, and we have discussed it because we deem that the doctrines finally adopted by the Court below possess many of the same dangers to bondholders.

Duncan, Sherman & Co. cannot be subrogated as junior encumbrancers until after satisfaction of the Principal debt.

Claimed—

THAT DUNCAN, SHERMAN & CO., COULD AS JUNIOR SECURITY HOLDERS, AND UNDER THE APPEARANCE OF PAYING THE COUPONS, ACQUIRE A RIGHT TO DEDUCT THEM OUT OF THE FIRST MORTGAGE pari passu WITH THE BONDHOLDERS.

The opinion of the Circuit Court on this point, tersely expresses the result of the decisions:

"Whilst we are inclined to think, that as holders of junior securities, Duncan, Sherman & Co., would have been entitled to pay the coupons, and hold them, by way of subrogation, we are not prepared to concede, that this would have placed them on any equality with the bondholders. No one can deprive the creditor of his security, or any part of it, without his consent, until his whole debt is satisfied. Sureties and others, entitled to the privilege of subrogation, paying only part of the debt, must be postponed to the creditor until they are in a position to demand all his securities." The above answer to the claim, to this subrogation is sustained by an unbroken array of authorities.

And the reasoning of these cases applies with double force to the phase of subrogation, discussed in the first point.

Considering the general right of subrogation on the part of a junior incumbrancer, subrogation means and implies, from its very nature, the payment of the claim of the subrogatee. Under this principle the second mortgagee has the right, when the first mortgage becomes due, to pay and satisfy the superior incumbrance, and thereby become subrogated to its rights as against the mortgagor. It is a principle for the protection and benefit of the subordinate incumbrancer as against the common debtor of the various lien holders.

Ellsworth vs. Lockwood, 42 N.Y., p. 97.

Under this doctrine, it has become established by the adjudications that a second mortgage lien holder may pay a coupon falling due, and belonging to a first mortgage bond, and thereby become subrogated to such rights as the bondholder held by virtue of the ownership of the coupon as against the mortgagor. The very statement of this application of the doctrine of subrogation shows, for itself, that the coupon which has been so redeemed by the subordinate incumbrancer is satisfied, and extinguished as far as the first mortgage incumbrancer is concerned. It is thenceforth to be laid out of view as a participator in the fund devoted to the satisfaction of the first mortgage bond and succeeding coupons. It becomes a part of the muniments of title of the subordinate incumbrancer who has thus redeemed it for his protection. After the full satisfaction of the first mortgage security he can assert it as against his fellow bondholders, standing in the same order of rank with him as a subordiate incumbrancer. They would be entitled upon paying their share of the expenses of subrogation, as their pro rata of the amount paid on the first mortgage coupons, to become participators in the subrogation.

The principles involved in the above statement of the law of this subject are still further sustained in this case, from the fact that the principal, as well as the interest falling due, is enforceable under the terms of the mortgage upon a default on a coupon, as fully elaborated in the opinion below.

We shall content ourselves under this head with quoting from an opinion, which the learned Chief Justice of the United States aided, then in the capacity of counsel in securing.

"The owner of the debt can foreclose when the first instalment becomes due, and to pay such instalment he may sell the property, and it is certainly correct in principle to hold that when the right to foreclose the equity of redemption accrues, the right to redeem the premises from such foreclosure attaches on paying the sum due for the non-payment of which foreclosure is sought. The junior incumbrancer must be entitled to step in and redeem the premises when the senior incumbrancer has the right to have them sold if not redeemed."

Butler v. Elliott 15 Cowen 187. (Dixon on Subrogation, 116.

But the subsequent creditor may be subrogated to such rights only by full payment of the debt.

Dixon on Subrogation, 122.

"In other words payment ought not to place the prior mortgagee in a worse situation than if payment were made by the mortgagor. And therefore, where an instalment of principal or interest of the debt secured by the first mortgage is due and the sum is paid by a subsequent mortgagee his lien upon the mortgaged property which results from such payment will be postponed to the payment of the residue of the first mortgage. But when the amount so due is paid together with costs where the action in his favor has been instituted, the right of the prior mortgagee to a sale of the mortgaged property ceases, and the most he can claim is the right to apply to the Court for an order of sale to satisfy future instalments as they become due in the event they are not paid.

Penn. v. Atlantic and Great Western Railroad Company. American Law Register, p. 576.

In a Maryland case

The endorser pays notes given for interest. No assignment given by the payee. He claims to be subrogated to mortgagee, and to be preferred to subsequent mortgagee.

Held, that subrogation to this interest would not place the surety on an equality with the mortgag~~or~~, ee as to sharing in the fund. "This holder of the claim must take rank as a simple contract creditor."

"It would not subserve the ends of justice to consider the assignment of an entire debt to a surety as effected by operation at law where he had paid but a part of it and still owed a balance to the creditor; and this Court would not countenance such an anomaly as a pro tanto assignment, the effect of which could only be to give distinct interest in the same debt to both creditor and surety."

"It may be, that when the appellant endorsed Dorsey's notes, he supposed he would have the benefit of the security held by the creditor; but if this was his view, he should have entitled himself to such indemnity, by an agreement to that effect, or by an assignment pro tanto when the notes were paid."

"We suppose that the principles of substitution would require payment in full of the debt on which the equitable assignment might be claimed."

Swan v. Patterson, 7 Maryland, p. 164.

The following is from the opinion of one of the Justices of this Court:

"Indeed there cannot be subrogation until the creditor is fully paid, for a right to subrogation is rather against the debtor than the creditor. The latter cannot be compelled to cede his claim while anything remains due."

Delaware and Hudson Canal Company's Appeal, 2 Wright, p. 572. Per Strong, J.

We need only add a partial list of the precedents on this point. Jones on Mortgages 707

ett v Cook 45 N.Y. 268
42 983
v Latta 4 McC. ~~L.R~~
f security

Field v. Hamilton, 45 Vt., p. 35.
Hoover a. Eppler, 2. P. F. Smith, 522.
Magee v. Leggett, 38 Miss, 139.
Rayner v. Kyner, 6. Watts, 227.
Vose v. Scatcherd, N. Y. Sup. Ct., Albany, Law D., July 14th, 1877.
Dixon on Subrogation, p. 122.

Certainly, if neither a junior encumbrancer, not a surety, can acquire a subrogation on partial payment to the detriment of the bondholder, there is not a shred of a pretence of subrogation to the first mortgage lien ~~for an~~ action at the instance of the debtor. As will be shown from the facts in this case, the rule laid down by the Supreme Court applies that no equity to subrogation can arise from fraudulent conduct, or breaches of duty.

by

Soutter v. Railroad Co., 13 Wall.

Alexander Duncan has not, therefore, succeeded through his assignors, Duncan, Sherman & Co., by operation of law to a first mortgage security upon this railroad. We will now consider the claim that he has become a first mortgage lien holder by virtue of a contract of sale executed by the first mortgage bondholders to Duncan, Sherman & Co., resulting in an assignment of their rights under the mortgage on the property, so that they must part with an aliquot share of their security to the claimant.

The First Mortgage Bondholders did not sell their Coupons of 1874 to Duncan, Sherman & Co.

All the information the bondholders had of the corporate affairs, was derived from the annual report for 1873, presented in April, 1874, and which exhibited net earnings of $907,000. This was nearly two hundred thousand dollars more than was necessary to pay the first mortgage interest. Indeed, on March 1st, 1874, the second mortgage interest became due, and there is no pretence that it was not paid. So that as far as the bondholders had any information at all it was of such a character as to give them full confidence that the corporation was able to pay the coupons.

In order properly to weigh the testimony on this point the Court should be advised of the motives and purposes that were actuating Duncan, Sherman & Co., at this time.

In the early months of 1874 the financial affairs of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company were in this condition :

Duncan, Sherman & Co. were the financial agents. Duncan was a director and the controller of the finances.

The company had a first mortgage debt of eight millions of dollars, and a second mortgage of debt of one and a half million dollars. p 279

Duncan, Sherman & Co. had notes of the company, and floating claims with convertible bonds as security, which did not become even a third mortgage until July, 1874. pp 46, 56, 57.

They were also most heavily interested in the stock. These were the two ties that bound them to the corporation. p 787

It was evident that Duncan, Sherman & Co. could not make their floating claims good if the company kept faith with the first mortgage bondholders. One or the other must be kept unpaid. Should it be the director-trustee with inferior security or the paramount bondholder. The whole scheme presented at this juncture is disclosed in the following letter from Duncan to the President of the Company:

New York, March 5th, 1874.

A. MURDOCK, Esq.,

On the points inquired of, I infer from what I hear from Mobile, that you are halting in your policy of requiring your creditors to extend your notes, as if you were certain that the negotiations I am endeavoring to make for the Company were already successful. This is not so; nor can I make much progress until I receive the facts which will enable me to obtain a quotation for our stock upon the Stock Exchange; in the meantime all the resources of the Company should be husbanded for the purpose of paying the interest due in May. The Company is still indebted to myself and others for some $200,000 advanced to .pay November, 1873, January and March, 1874, interest, and this amount should be reimbursed, if the Company expect to obtain assistance in paying the May interest. Can you not make further remittances out of your receipts

(Signed) WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN.

Any disclosure of the insolvent condition of the corporation would have at once perilled the ability of Duncan, Sherman & Co. to continue in the receipt of the revenues of the road, as indicated in the above, and by their own accounts and correspondence. Pages 290, 291, 508, 510.

The principal interest that Duncan, Sherman & Co. had in the road was to keep up its apparent solvency, in order to profit by their stock operations.

The great scheme which they had on foot to market the stock, would have come to immediate disaster if the inability of the Company to pay paramount interest had been acknowledged. pp, 621. 622,

With these circumstances in view, the Court can better understand what impressions were designed to be produced on the minds of the First Mortgage Bondholders, when their interest became due on May 1st, 1874.

It must also be remembered that the first public notice which the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company furnished to these bondholders of any default on its first mortgage securities, was about one year after the transactions hereinafter described.

This was effected by the circular of April 23d, 1875.

The first suggestion that naturally presents itself to the mind is.

If it was intended by the Railroad Company to notify the bondholders that it had made arrangements, whereby they might sell their coupons; why did not the directors of the Railroad Company furnish a notice to the bondholders similar to the one furnished a year afterwards. On the contrary, no such notice, either in the public press or by circular, to the bondholders was furnished by the Railroad Company.

Another suggestion of equal reasonableness presents itself. If Duncan, Sherman & Co., intended to invite the first mortgage bondholders, to make a sale to them of their coupons, why did not they themselves, or through their agents, make some similar announcement, either through the public press, or by circular, to the first mortgage bondholders, announcing that they, Duncan, Sherman & Co., desired to buy from the bondholders the coupons of 1874. But no such proposition of purchase came from Duncan, Sherman & Co., to the bondholders. The means of making a contract of purchase of more than a half a million dollars of first mortgage security, present no difficulty of attainment. ~~It does~~ They not differ from any of the ordinary means of buying personal property, which is attainable by any well seeking purchaser.

The bondholders had nothing to look to but the tenor of the instrument which they held, which was a contract to pay them certain amounts of money at certain specified times. They were not seeking a purchaser; they were seeking payment; and in that search they went to the railroad company, their debtor, and to its accustomed agencies. Why did not Duncan, Sherman, & Co., interpose at that stage. They could have done what, in making such purchases, is done every day, they could have offered to buy the coupons. They might have tendered orally or in writing, to make a contract of purchase, just as any intending purchaser proffers bids for any other species of property. Had they adopted this simple and straightforward course of action, the bondholders could have exercised their option, whether to sell and assign their rights under the mortgage, and keep the coupons alive as against their bonds; or they could have asserted their rights as mortgagees, holding a defaulted security, and have enforced their remedies against the trust premises. Nothing of this kind transpired. ~~And~~ Indeed it is apparent that such an honest course would have been fatal to the further appropriation of the revenues by Duncan, Sherman & Co., and the marketing of ther stock. The first day of May, 1874, arrived, when the coupons became payable, and ~~without a~~ no word of intimation was given o the subject The bondholders were silently led to approach the usual places of payment.

In considering the effect of the testimony, as to what transpired at the several places of payment, the following phases of the transaction should be present to the mind :

I.—Moneys may be loaned to a railroad corporation, for the purpose of paying the coupons, without any reservation of security on the part of the lender. In that case the lender become a simple creditor of the corporarion, Cases cited supra.

Commonwealth v. Ches & O Canal Co
32 Md., 545 Et ali

II.—Moneys may be loaned for such a purpose, the lender contracting with the corporation to take an assignment of the coupons as they are paid. This contract confers on the lender a right to the coupons only against the corporation, but not against the bondholder. As the mortgagor could execute a new mortgage to secure a lender of money, so he may keep alive an already existing security, and the new creditor may hold it as a valid muniment of title against the mortgage, but not against the bondholder.

Cases supra.

III. There may be a direct contract on the part of the bondholders to sell and assign their share of the debt represented by the coupons with the attendant liens and securities.

It is to be considered under which of the above categories the evidence adduced brings this claim. This must depend upon what transpired by written or oral proceedings of the bondholders in the premises, at the times the coupons were payable. Anything said to the bondholders, or done in their presence which could refer to any transaction but the third one above stated, namely, a sale, could have no interest to them, as it could not affect their rights. If they were told "The Bank of Mobile was paying the coupons," or, "Take your coupons to the Bank of Mobile, and you will get your money," there was nothing in that to create an assignment from them, but everything to cause them to suppose, as they really did, that the Railroad Company had made arrangements with the Bank for payment.

It must be borne in mind that the bondholders knew absolutely nothing of the internal condition of the corporation. There is one passage in the testimony of Duncan which indicates a purpose to cast upon the bond holders such a knowledge of the corporate affairs as might be derived from a scrutiny of the report of 1874. Fairness requires that it should be impressed upon the Court, that the report of 1874, so called, did not appear until April 23d, '75. An ~~The~~ element connected with the internal administration of the corporate affairs, which it is important to consider in connection with the testimony regarding the payment of the coupons, is, the evident purpose to maintain the credit of the corporation by an appearance of ability and sufficient solvency to pay these first mortgage coupons in 1874. This is strongly evidenced by the testimony of the vice-president Walker, who represented the railroad company in the negotiations on this subject. He is no longer connected with the affairs of the road, as appears from the record, and is very frank in his statement that the object of this arrangement was to maintain the credit of the corporation. Also Duncan's letter p 602 and p. 408 "In anticipation of their receipts."

This is also evident from the fact that the arrangement was executed as a loan to the Company, for which there was a pledge of the net revenues. *

~~There is an~~other elements in this connection ~~referred to above, and which~~ must be very powerful in carrying conviction that it was not intended to let the bondholders know that, even the company was reduced to the necessity of borrowing the money in order to provide their interest payments.

Th~~is is~~ese are the relations of Duncan, Sherman & Co., as absorbers of the very resources that should have gone to pay the Interest and the arrangements for the marketing of the stock of the corporation simultaneously with these transactions. Duncan, Sherman & Co. were very large holders of the convertible bonds. William H. Hays, who testifies that he knew that Duncan, Sherman & Co. were going to busy the coupons, was also a large holder of convertible bonds. So was Bonner, who sold his coupons to Duncan, Sherman & Co., likewise a large holder of convertible bonds. If these men knew that it was intended to purchase these coupons, they did not testify that they disclosed that knowledge to any one else. It would be contrary to the very nature of the schemes of these parties who were preparing an elaborate arrangement to furnish the public through the New York Stock Exchange, with the proprietorship of the stock that they would at the same moment disclose the fatal fact that the road was not able from its earnings to pay its first mortgage interest, and furthermore, that it was not able, upon its own credit, to obtain the money for that purpose, but that its bondholders were obliged, if they desired to obtain any money on their coupons, to borrow it, to transfer their rights in the mortgage, and their power of foreclosure to another party. With these facts in view, we can better estimate the testimony on this subject.

These bonds were all convertible into stock at 25 cts on the dollar

To establish title by purchase in Alexander Duncan, it must appear that when the bondholder detached his coupon and delivered it, he intended a sale—so understood it.

The decisions of this Court upon the elements necessary to establish a sale will furnish us with a guide upon this subject.

7t Viley against Donaldson, 94 U. S.

With these authorities in view, we will examine the transactions which passed in reference to the payment of these coupons, at the several places and times when the bondholders presented them. In the confidence that there can be no controversy with the estimate placed on them by the Circuit Justice—that they did not constitute any sale of the coupons. In considering these facts, it should be premised that in all the several instances mentioned below, it appears that when the bondholders detached their coupons from their bonds and presented the same, they did so with the purpose of receiving payment, and not with the purpose of making a sale.

Coupons paid in London, in May, 1874.

They were paid at the usual place of payment. There is no pretence that any notice of any kind was given to the holders. Nothing transpired, as appears from the testimony of their own witness, the manager of the Union Bank of London, but the simple presentation of the coupons and the receipt of the moneys. It is inconceivable that the lien could be sustained on these coupons, even on the theory suggested in the opinion below. We are entitled without dispute to a reversal in regard to these twenty thousand ~~dollars~~ pounds of coupons.

Coupons paid in Mobile, in May and November, 1874.

The difference between these two payments relates principally to a claim that in November there was a piece of paper pasted in the office of the company which is alleged to have contained words of purchase, and to be a binding notice on the subject of these coupons. The Court below seems to have adopted the events which transpired in Mobile as the standard for its adjudication in respect of all the coupon payments. We cannot conceive why this theory was propounded. Certainly, if title by assignment is the basis of Alexander Duncan's claim, that assignment must be established by the facts as they transpired at the several places of payment. If these events be different in London and in Mobile and in New York, there can be no more reason for adopting the facts of one payment in preference to another as the basis of a conclusion of law in respect of all the payments made thousands of miles apart, and at six months' interval, than there could be in assigning the facts of one distinct litigation to constitute the basis of decision for another litigation dependant on entirely different facts. But considering the facts of the case at Mobile, they certainly do not establish, as in fact, the judgment below held, any contract of sale by the bondholders.

Unguarded and uninformed, as shown in the opening of the argument, the bondholders went to the office of their debtor, the railroad company, for the collection of their interest. They were received by the treasurer of the railroad company. Neither Duncan, Sherman & Co., nor their agent at Mobile, the Bank of Mobile, had any representative or agent at the office of the railroad company, to enter into any negotiation with the bondholders, in respect to the purchase of their coupons. The bondholders handed their coupons to the administrative officer and paymaster of the corporation, the treasurer. He examined them. On the May coupon, there is some conflict of testimony as to the form of order or voucher, which the treasurer gave the bondholders for the payment of their money.

The railroad company had never paid the bondholders any cash. It had invariably given some form of warrant directed to the Bank of Mobile.

The weight of testimony seems to be, that for May, 1874, the bondholders were paid by check on the Bank of Mobile. This we regard as immaterial, one way or the other. The treasurer and his assistant, testify that they placed the coupons in envelopes with a memorandum, or receipt, it may be more properly called, printed on the back of the envelope, to the following effect: "Paid," then the amount, and the name of the payee. This same form of voucher or envelope, had been used on previous occasions. The language of it, "Paid," was certainly not calculated to indicate to the bondholder anything connected with the purchase of his coupons; on the contrary, it would naturally produce the very opposite impression on his mind. Handing this voucher to the bondholders, the treasurer, said, "The Bank of Mobile will pay you the money," or, "Take this to the Bank of Mobile, and you will get your money." The testimony of Willoughby, the treasurer, should be closely scanned. It certainly does not bear out in any degree, a claim of purchase. His assistant, perhaps, went a little further than he did, in stating that he said to some of the bondholders, that the Bank of Mobile was paying the coupons, as the company was not in funds, and could not pay them.

Taking the most favorable view of this testimony, it is susceptible of but two interpretations, either one of which it would have been perfectly natural for the bondholders to have placed upon it, at the time the language is alleged to have been used to them. They might have reasonably supposed, if they supposed at all about the matter, that the Bank of Mobile had loaned money to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, wherewith to pay its coupons. Or upon a still more favorable view for the claimants, they might have supposed that the Bank of Mobile, had loaned the money with the view of holding the coupons as against the Company. Let us examine this:

As a matter of fact it appears that no bondholder, except one Peter Hamilton, supposed, or had the slightest suspicion that he was selling his coupons. We call the attention of the Court to the testimony of the numbers of citizens of Mobile, whom we placed on the witness stand to establish the impression, or rather absence of impression, on their minds in reference to this matter. To most of them it was a mere matter of administrative detail of which they took no notice. In what form the Railroad Company sent them to its bank, was a matter of which, as creditors of the Company, they took no concern, nor felt that they were bound to take any. * A bank has a well recognized function of paying orders for money. It is not one of its ordinary or legitimate functions to purchase mortgage securities of any kind. It does not invest in dead capital, but in active commercial discounts. Railroad coupons do not belong to this class of obligations. However that may be, they went to the bank and presented this envelope voucher or warrant, with "Paid" marked upon it. The Company marked it "Paid." This was an indication of its destiny, and the destiny of its contents. They were "paid."

Did the bank do anything to disabuse the minds of the coupon holders of this result? Not at all. Not a word from any of the officials of the cank. They simply received the envelopes and paid the money. It is true that Duncan had telegraphed the President of the Bank to purchase coupons. If this be so, then the bank did not perform its duty to Duncan, Sherman & Co. It certainly did do not ~~purchase~~ anything towards purchasing the coupons. It did nothing to contribute to that result in any manner, shape, or form. The bondholders left the bank, some with the amount credited in their bank books, some with checks for gold interest, where the bonds, called for gold, and some with currency for their coupons.

We cannot do better than to quote the estimate of this transaction contained in the opinion of the learned chancellor below:

"Then was it a purchase? We are clearly of opinion that there was no purchase, unless there was an intent on the part of the original holder to sell. This is almost a self-evident proposition. And where as in this case, a sale, as compared with payment, is prejudicial to the holder's interest by continuing the burden of the coupon upon the common security, and lessening its value in reference to the balance of the debt, the intent to sell should be clearly proved. Such an intent may be inferred, however, when the holder has actual notice that purchase, and not payment, is being made, and, when having such notice he consents to take his money. To the same result will follow, if the holder acquiesces in the transaction, on being subsequently informed that payment was not made by the debtor company, but was made by a third party intending to purchase the coupons, and keep them subsisting and uncanceled. In such case the holder would undoubtedly have a right to repudiate the trasacaction, and demand possession of his coupons, by returning the money received for them, but not doing this, he would be presumed to acquiesce in their transfer.

" In the present case many of the parties had actual notice of the nature of the transaction, and all who inquired were informed in relation to it. The circumstances of the payment were calculated to excite enquiry. The coupons were not paid in the usual manner by the officers or agents of the company, at the place designated for payment, but after examination were sealed up in an envelope, and the holder was directed to go elsewhere to get his money. At the place to which he was directed to go—he received it and delivered up his coupons. They were not delivered up to the company. This was an indication that they were not to be cancelled. The great advantage to the holder, on payment by the company, would have been the cancelation of the coupons, so as to diminish the burden on the mortgage security, but he delivered his coupons to a third party, who furnished him the money for them. He ought to have known that that party, whether the bank itself, or some person by whom it was employed and furnished with funds, would at least keep the coupons for its security until the company could pay them. We think that this was notice to the holder, at least sufficient notice to put him upon inquiry. It may not have been, and we think it was not sufficient notice to bind him absolutely to a contract of sale. He might still have repudiated the transaction by returning his money, but it was certainly sufficient to put him upon inquiry, and his subsequent acquiescence confirmed the title of Duncan, Sherman & Co , whose money he received.

The basis of the opinion on which it was adjudicated that these coupons to the amount of $535,000 are continued as a first mortgage security, entitled to deduct from the mortgage of the bondholders a share of the trust premises, is then this: That the first mortgage bondholders were put upon inquiry. It is conceded that there was no sale. The testimony was too flimsy to justify any deduction that there was a meeting of minds and a contract of sale by the bondholders. But the novel and startling doctrine is enunciated that a creditor may be held to have assigned his rights in the mortgage by not observing and scanning the manner of the debtor or any other person with whom he comes in contact through the debtor. The case resolves itself then into a discussion of a principle of law. Is the owner of property bound, as a matter of law, to observe the conduct of his debtor, or of any party with whom he deals through his debtor, to discover whether it is the intention of such party to become the purchaser of his property? At the threshold it is apparent that the enforcement of this position would reverse the entire law of sales of personal property. The principle of caveat emptor would no longer be applicable; it should rather be caveat vendidor. Upon what theory of ethics or of law should the intending purchaser of property be relieved from the duty and the necessity of making such intention known. How can the owner deal with him as a purchaser, unless he knows that he occupies, or desires to occupy, that relation. How can a price be agreed upon for the property. If Duncan, Sherman & Co. intended to become the purchasers of these coupons, or, rather, intended that the bondholders should know that they intended to become the purchasers of the coupons, why could they not convey or indicate that intention to the bondholders? The Court found that they did not bring that intention to the minds of the bondholders, and hence that there was no binding contract of sale. What proper object could Duncan, Sherman & Co., have in this concealment of their purposes? They had only to say by themselves or an authorized agent, "We desire to buy your coupons." The bondholders would then have a proposition of purchase before him. He could have made terms. He could have elected whether to take the money or to enforce his mortgage against the corporation. None of these elements of a contract of sale transpired.

Put upon inquiry as to what? It could be nothing else than in respect of the intention of the Bank of Mobile to buy these coupons. In the previous paragraph of the opinion, the Court tells us that as such a transaction is prejudical to the bond holder the intent to sell should be clearly proved.

If, then, the bondholder, as is conceded, parted with his coupon without such intent, when did the transaction develop, or, rather, metamorphose itself into a sale of the coupons. The theory of the opinion seems to be that the suspicions of the bondhold should have been excited from the form of the transaction, and that the bvrden was on him to follow out these suspicions. We cannot appreciate the logic of this position. At the time the bondholder parted with his coupon and received the money, the transaction was either a sale or a payment, so far as the bondholders were concerned, and their rights under their mortgage.

The doctrine of a party being put upon inquiry, is totally inapplicable to such a transaction, as the one at bar. The principle invoked is one fully defined in equity jurisprudence. It may be stated thus: When a purchaser of realty, upon searching the muniments of title, finds some reference to an existing incumbrance, he is put upon inquiry, so that he is bound to follow up the indication of an existing lien, and examine its condition and rights. If he does not follow up the enquiry suggested to him by the notice furnished by the record, he takes the property, subject to all the rights and equities of the incumbrance. It will be seen that this doctrine applies to an intending purchaser, and applies in favor of an antecedent and existing incumbrance. There can certainly be no legitimate application of this doctrine as against a party holding the lien, in order to establish an intention on his part to sell his incumbrance. This is the very opposite of the principle above stated. Caveat emptor is the rule which underlies the doctrine of the purchaser being put upon enquiry. in regard to the incumbrances involved in his muniments of title. It is a doctrine in favor of the holder of the lien. It is to secure an incumbrance, not to abstract it.

The theory which, as far as we can ascertain, seems to have been in the mind of the Court below, may be best illustrated by this remark contained in the opinion: "So the same result will follow if the holder acquiesces in the transaction, on being subsequently informed that payment was not made by the debtor company, but was made by a third party, intending to purchase the coupons and keep them subsisting and uncancelled." The Court does not find that the bondholder was so far put upon inquiry, at the time of the surrender of his coupons, as that he was then bound to any contract whatever. The relations of the parties having been then established, the Court throws upon the creditors, who had surrendered his coupon, upon the faith of a payment, the burden of making subsequent inquiry to endeavor to discover whether the party to whom he had surrendered his coupon, really intended to purchase it or to pay it. The theory of this judgment, throws the entire burden of such a transaction upon the original owner of the property.

If a purchaser had gone to work in the most simple and honest way, he might have bought the coupons openly and fairly from their owners. Not having done this, having for purposes of his own, concealed his intentions sufficiently, must the bondholders afterwards seek out such a coy and reticent dealer in railroad coupons, and inquire from him if he really did intend to buy their coupons. If such a legal obligation exists upon the owners of railroad securities, it is in the power of any one for their own advantage, to convert the payment of interest on a mortgage bond into a loan of money, to be carved out of the mortgage security at any convenient time thereafter, by an unexpressed intention. Its effect is to render it attainable on the part of any one, to obtain the ownership of coupons with all their mortgage rights, and yet to conceal and veil his purposes of buying them. We might better at once admit all the claims of partial subrogation in their fullest extent, for the theory enunciated in this opinion is tantamount in its results to the bondholder, to all the worst effects that could follow from that doctrine.

Says the opinion: "In such case the holder would undoubtedly have a right to repudiate the transaction and demand possession of his coupons, by returning the money received for them, but not doing this he would have presumtively acquiesced in their transfer." But is the Court quite sure that the bondholder can repudiate the transaction, so that he can be reinstated in the same position which he would have occupied on the day when the coupons became due. In the first place, is the bondholder who received the money in May, 1874, upon finding out that he became unwittingly a seller of those coupons, is he bound, at his own expense and trouble, to return the money from all quarters of the globe and under all circumstances, or lose his interest pro tanto in the first mortgage.

He has lost the right of foreclosure. The property has suffered successive defaults in the meanwhile. Had he known that it was proposed to buy his coupons in 1874, he could have refused to sell them and have foreclosed. Had the property been brought to sale on the first default or the second default, had those defaults been made known to the bondholders the property might have produced a much better price than after it had become discredited by numerous failures.

Besides this injury to the right of the bondholder in the fee of the mortgaged estate, what is to be said about the use of the revenues during the twelve months that the property has remained in the hands of the mortgagor? Had Duncan, Sherman & Co. confided to the bondholders that they desired to become the owners of their coupons, with all their mortgage rights maintained, and the bondholders had refused to enter into this contract, the revenues for the year 1874, amounting to more than enough to have paid the coupons for the year, could have been placed in the possession of the bondholders and have been applied to the payment of these very coupons. Afterwards when the moneys of the company that could have been secured to pay the coupons have been used by Duncan, Sherman & Co., is the bondholder to return the money received and take back a coupon after the exhaustion of the annual revenues?

November 1st, 1874, of £6 15s. 0d., £6 and £3 each will be purchased at their full value. This is sufficient notice to the parties holding the same, that the coupons are not paid by the company, which is the position we wish maintained, until reimbursed for the advances. Duncan, Sherman & Co." Note how very careful Duncan was to restrict and circumscribe the officials of the Credit Foncier in reference to the information, which it was to furnish to the people, whose property they proposed to themselves to acquire. Nothing was to be communicated to them by word of mouth. They were not to be asked to sign any contract of sale, but a paper was to be pasted at the coupon desk which they might or might not see. Their attention was not to be called to it, as Duncan says, "This will be all sufficient." The Circuit Cour does not seem to have regarded any of the testimony in reference to notices, so called, of this character, either in Mobile or in London, as of any weight whatsoever. Clearly, such a device cannot be treated as evidence of the meeting of minds, and a contract of sale based on it, particularly in a case where, as the Circuit Court tells us, "a sale was most prejudical to the interests of the bondholders." Even in the most ordinary contracts of life, knowledge would not be implied against the owner of a property from the posting of such a paper in an office or a banking house. What obligation is there upon any one to see such a posting? What obligation is there on any one to look for such a posting?

It is a part of the history of our jurisprudence that a struggle has been made in reference to the limitations of carriers liability by such means known as general notice, and they have been uniformly discountenanced by our courts. But to apply such a doctrine to the transfer of the absolute title to property is an entire novelty. It would appear, therefore, that Duncan was mistaken in thinking that such a posting was all sufficient notice for the position that he wished maintained. The Circuit Court does not even deem such a suggestion worthy of its consideration. Leaving this part of the subject, we merely call attention again to the peculiar solicitude of Duncan that this should be a pretence of notice to the bondholders, while at the same time, it is evident that there was to be really a suppression of information as to the relations which they proposed to claim on getting possession of the compons. this 2,000 pounds of coupon

Payments in New York.

Duncan's direction was to his clerks to inform all who inquired that they were purchasing the coupons. There is, certainly, a conflict of testimony between Duncan's clerk, and the bondholder, Oliver, and such advantage, consistent with the other features of the case, as Duncan may derive from this difference between the witnesses, he may be entitled to. But, as we will proceed to show, even a supposition on the part of the bondholders, that they were selling their coupons, will not avail to the claimant under the circumstances and facts of this case.

Duncan is Estopped by Fraud and Breach of Trust.

We have now to consider a branch of this case, which presents peculiar equities scarcely to be found in any other controversy, on the subject of the payment of railroad coupons. These appellants would have come fully within the authorities on this subject, if they had contested these claims, solely upon the ground that they had not made a sale of their coupons in the year 1874, and without any regard to the question whether the Company have paid the coupons or not. That position, it will be seen, is really based upon the doctrine that a fraud is consummated against the bondholder. A claim of purchase can not be tenable in the absence of the full consent of the bondholder to be deprived of his right of foreclosure, and to subject the revenues of the property to impartial administration. This is entirely irrespective of the question whether the corporation earned enough, or had enough money, with which to pay the interest as it fell due.

But in this case, we have the additional and substantial equity that the corporation earned more than $700,000, which was sufficient to have paid the First Mortgage interest, and that by the action of the very parties through whom this present claim is set up those moneys were, in breach of trust, diverted in great part to their own benefit.

Alexander Duncan is the assignee of Duncan, Sherman & Co. As the payments and the assignments were made after the coupons were overdue, the claimant is bound by the equities against Duncan, Sherman & Co. The relation of Duncan, Sherman & Co., and the members of that firm, to this corporation, is clearly set forth in the opinion of the Circuit Court: "William B. Duncan, the head of the firm, was for several years a director of the company, and in April, 1874, he became its president, and was invested with the most plenary control of all its financial affairs. By resolutions of the Directors, adopted in April, 1874, after Mr. Duncan was elected president, he, as such, was invested with full direction over the available securities held and owned by the company in consolidated bonds, convertible bonds, first and second mortgage bonds and stock, and was authorized to sell or hypothecate the same, and the net earnings of the company were pledged for repayment of advances made by him for the purpose of meeting the May interest, and the consolidated bonds were pledged as security for the floating debt. The truth is, the whole financial operations of the company were under the control and passed through the hands of Duncan, Sherman & Co., both in 1873 and 1874, and up to the time of its open suspension in May, 187~~6~~. 5

p 310

At the times when Duncan, Sherman & Co. claimed to have bought the coupons of 1874, they held moneys of the Corporation sufficient to discharge the interest.

Duncan and Elliott, in their capacity as directors of the corporation were trustees for its creditors, and it will be seen by the foregoing quotation that no persons standing in relations of trust were ever clothed, or ever took upon themselves fuller trust powers than Duncan, Sherman & Co. and its members. With these powers came corresponding duties. The manner in which they discharged these trusts is the question to be considered. Besides the available securities of the company, the other trust funds which came into their hands during the year 1874 are likewise described and set forth in the following extract from the opinion of the Circuit Court: "The resources which thus came into their hands were derived from the earnings of the road, the disposable securities and stock of the company, and the temporary loans that were made from time to time. It appears from the annual report of the company for the year 1874—the year in question—that its net earnings for that year were $708,000, and the sales of bonds, mostly convertible, amounted to $94,000, making a total of $802,000. The contestants in this case contend that these sums were sufficient to have kept down and paid the interest of the first mortgage bonds and most of the other outstanding bonds of the company. This is true. The annual interest of the first mortgage bonds, including the Tennessee Substitution Bonds, was about $730,000."

In the above statement we have a description, first, of the trustees and their powers, and, secondly, of the trust funds and their nature.

In the light of these facts it appears by the extracts from the accounts of Duncan, Sherman & Co., and of the Bank of Mobile as their agent, with the railroad company, that at the very times when they claim to have purchased the coupons in question from the bondholders, the following amounts of money were standing to the credit of the corporation:

At New York, in May, 1874	$96,350 00
At New York, in November, 1874	50,000 00
At Mobile, at the times of the payments of the November coupons ...	236,999 50
	$383,349 50

Could the trustees for the creditors withhold these moneys, and apply then to their own purposes, and for their own objects, and at the same moment claim to purchase from the first mortgage bondholders their rights in the mortgaged estate, and their rights to seize the very moneys then being applied to the uses of the very parties claiming to be purchasers. We maintain that, conceding the bondholders supposed they were selling their coupons. Duncan, Sherman & Co. really acquired them with the trust funds to the above amount.

Coupons

An attempted purchase

The~~y~~n must be regarded as trust property for the common benefit. requir~~ing~~ the exercise of gooded faith by Duncan, Sherman & Co. in disclosing the condition of the trust

Again referring to the language of the opinion:

"As financial agents of the company and general managers of its pecuniary concerns, William B. Duncan being the chief executive officer, it is undoubtedly true that they were bound to observe entire good faith. Had they been furnished by the company with the requisite means to pay the coupons, it would have been acting in bad faith toward it, to have purchased the coupons in this manner without the company's consent; and under such circumstances even to have purchased them with its consent, and kept them on foot for the purpose of getting possession of the company's property would have been a fraud upon other parties interested in that property. But the requisite funds were not furnished by the company. Money enough was furnished. It is true to have paid these particular coupons by leaving everything else unpaid."

Duncan, Sherman & Co. misappropriated the revenues applicable to the coupons to satisfy their own inferior claims.

Bearing in mind the above language, let us examine the financial relations of Duncan, Sherman & Co., with the Railroad Company. Duncan, Sherman & Co. had entered upon the year 1874, as large creditors of the Railroad Company. For considerations, and with securities which are fully shown by the evidence, they had, during the year 1873, loaned about $300,000 to the railroad company. Before the first of November, it appears from the report of a special meeting of the Board of Directors, over which Duncan presided, and at which Elliott was present, that "the net earnings for the preceding nine months, amounting to between $300,000 and $325,000 back, been appropriated to the reinbursement of coupons matured previous to February last, and to the reduction of floating debt and other claims." These were the coupons of 1873, which, in his answer, Duncan says, were not purchased, but to pay which the company was loaned, the money making it thus a mere debt. The balance of the claims of Duncan, Sherman & Co., on various floating obligations is shown, by the extracts from the books referred to in the statement of facts. These moneys were repaid to Duncan, Sherman & Co., during the very interval, and at the very times when they claim that they purchased the coupons. Rather, it is more correct to say, not that the moneys were paid to them, but that they paid themselves out of the moneys and trust funds of the corporation. At the very time, simultaneously, when they claim to have purchased the coupons, they were using the trust moneys to satisfy their own subordinate floating claims against the fund. The whole machinery of pretended purchase of the coupons, is the merest gossamer pretence. The railroad company was depositing money in the Bank of Mobile to the credit of Duncan, Sherman & Co., and while the bank was remiting this money to Duncan, Sherman & Co., it was drawing on them for money to pay the coupons. Are not these facts fairly within the principle laid down by the Circuit Court. In the light of these facts, can there be any doubt of the proper application of the following extract from the same paragraph of the opinion of the Court.

"Money enough was furnished, it is true, to have paid these particular coupons, by leaving everything else unpaid, but the company was overwhelmed with floating debt, and creditors were pressing to be paid. Securities to a large amount had to be pledged as collateral to prevent instant prosecution, and debts had to be extended by payment of interest to prevent the sacrifice of the securities. Duncan, Sherman & Company cannot be justly condemned for paying these pressing obligations as far as the money in their hands would go. Immediate bankruptcy would have resulted from the contrary course."

We have seen that the larger part of these creditors who were pressing, were Duncan, Sherman, & Co. It appears from the testimony that the other floating creditors upon payment of their interest, and a small curtailment of the principal, of the obligations of the company which they held, were induced to renew the company's paper. Duncan bought at this very period at a discount, $25,000 of the Company's paper, and obtained payment out of the trust funds. This was one of the pressing debts with which the company and the trust fund too, it may be said, was overwhelmed.

But we must differ in toto from the doctrine of law involved in the above extract from the opinion. This appropriation of the revenues of the trust estate, to use a common expression, right from under the nose of the bondholders, is justified on the ground of benefit to the trust estate. Floating creditors were pressing; collaterals would be sacrificed. Is this ground tenable as an abstract proposition, divested of the lurid light of the real destination of the moneys in this case?

Moneys are to be paid to subordinate creditors in preference to mortgage bondholders, for fear of the former. What harm could such creditors inflict on the paramount bondholders. Suppose they got as far as judgment and execution, they could not have disturbed the entirety of the trust estate. This Court decided the arm of Chancery to be long enough to reach that position in the case of Coe v. Pemrock, 23 Howard.

If the theory of th~~e~~to opinion be correct, the most beneficial act to a bondholder is not to pay him his interest, but to pay to inferior creditors. If this be adopted as the law of this Court, then all the protection which Courts of Chancery to railroad estates as entireties, even against fellow bondholders under a common mortgage, a position against inferior creditors count for naught.

A still more curious fact, throwing light upon this transaction, was the deposit of some $48,000 by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, in the Bank of Mobile to the credit of the coupon account which had been opened by that bank with Duncan, Sherman & Co. More than $2,500 of his money was deposited directly by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Co. in this very coupon account, and no contract was made at Circuit by Duncan, about that. The bookkeeper of the Bank of Mobile distinctly testified as follows: "The Mobile and Ohio Railroad provided some. They deposited in 1874, some $45,800 to the credit of Duncan, Sherman & Co." The explanation which Pratt, the president of the bank, and a director of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, gives of this transaction, is somewhat curious. The item as entered in the coupon account of the Bank of Mobile, acting as agents for D. S. & Co., reads "Tranferred from individual ledger $45,882.45." Pratt says that was an amount standing to the credit of Duncan, Sherman & Co., deposited by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Co., and tranferred erroneously by the bookkeeper to the coupon account. The amounts should have been held subject to the drafts of Duncan, Sherman & Co., of New Orleans. The error was corrected in the account-sent to Duncan, Sherman & Co. This exemplifies and illustrates the whole character of these transactions. The money was paid into the bank by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company. It was credited to the account of Duncan, Sherman & Co. Meanwhile the coupons are paid, and drafts drawn on Duncan, Sherman & Co. for the amount of these payments. The moneys of the railroad company are remitted simultaneously with the drafts. Duncan, Sherman & Co. paid the drafts of the bank substantially with the moneys of the railroad company. The result is, that the moneys of the railroad company are used to pay Duncan, Sherman & Co.'s floating claims, and Duncan, Sherman & Co. are shown to have used that money to pay the coupons with. In the case of the $48,000 above described, the veil of bookkeeping was not even preserved. The identical moneys of the railroad company desposited by it in the bank of Mobile, were put just where they belonged in that instance, in the coupon account, to pay the first mortgage interest. That was a situation, from which it was difficult to be extricated, but the president of the Bank of Mobile pronounced it an error in bookkeeping. It should have been remitted, that amount of money, he says, to Duncan, Sherman & Co., of New Orleans.

On the above facts, can a Court of conscience justify such an appropriation of trust funds? Is not a trustee, under the law and decisions of this Court, to be held to any different accountability? Is a doctrine for the preservation of subsisting liens to be invoked, to obtain a lien under such circumstances, and the bondholders "put on inquiry," (similiar to that of the Mobile and Ohio R. R. Co., in 1874), in the face of such transactions?

If the doctrine stated in the opinion, and quoted on pages 108 and 109, as to the good faith required from trustees, is to have any application, certainly a stronger case could hardly be presented.

Directors Trustees for Creditors of Corporation.

The trust relation of the directors of a corporation towards its creditors is fully established.

Jackson a. Ludeling Wallace.
Aperton Railroad Company vs. Blakely, 1 McHenry, 461.
Ashhurst's Appeal, 60 Pennsylvania State, 314.

The principle of these decisions cannot be questioned. A corporation occupies the legal relation of liability, but with no power to act or administer its affairs, save by and through its agents and officials. It is not the debtor that is trustee for the creditors, but it is the instrumentalities through which this character of debtor is necessarily obliged to act, to whom the law attaches the duties and responsibilities of trustees.

In a late case decided in the First Circuit by Judge Shepley, this doctrine was carefully examined, and its application enforced, in a case very similar to the one at bar.

Mr. Farwell was a director of the Boston, Hartford and Erie Railroad.

That corporation having reached a perilous position in its financial experience, and Mr. Farwell being a considerable creditor, obtained from the directors of the corporation, and by the exercise of such influence, apparently of a moral character, as he possessed over the board, an order for a large amount of the assets of the corporation in the shape of available securities. These assets, in pursuance of the warrant of the directors, were applied to the satisfaction of his claims against the company. Subsequently the corporation became bankrupt, and assignees were appoihted. They filed a bill to subject the assets, this received by Mr. Farwell, or their proceeds, to the trust, in favor of the other creditors of the corporation. The validity and the high character of Mr. Farwell's claims against the corporation were not disputed. The proceeding of the assignees was entirely outside of any of the clauses peculiar to the bankrupt laid. They were based upon the ground that the transaction was in fraud of the rights of the other creditors of the corporation.

The Court held that a director could not obtain any advantage over other creditors in the administration and distribution of the assets of an insolvent corporation. Equality is equity.

Barnard rs. Farwell, 1 Holmes.

In the light of this decision how are we to regard the obtaining of $364.572\frac{20}{100}$ by Duncan, Sherman & Co. in the year 1874? We have seen that they entered upon that year as large floating creditors of the corporation, having only subordinate and inferior securities. They finished the year 1874 with the satisfaction of nearly all of their claims against the company, by means of the diversion the net earnings of the road from the payment of first mortgage interest to the satisfaction of their own claims. So successfully had they administered the affairs of the trust in this behalf, that on the first of May, 1875, when "the first open suspension," in the language of the opinion occurred, they had brought themselves more than $17,000 into the debt of the company. Instead of losing several hundred thousand dollars, and standing in the same position in wich they stood at the commencement of the year 1874, they claim now, by this course of administration, to have satisfied their inferior floating claims and to have become first mortgage lien-holdholders, entitled to share on the same basis with the bondholders of highest and oldest security. In addition to these delinquencies against good faith, which impress their administration of the corporate affairs with fraud and breach of trust, on the facts and the law, there was a still further special equity against them which prevented their successful manipulation of the trust fund in the manner above described.

Curran v Arkansas 15 How.
Gas Light Co case 10 L. R Eq 368
Drury v Cross 7 Wall.
Bliss v Mattyson 45 N Y

The pledge of the net earnings should be marshalled in favor of the First Mortgage Bondholders.

On the 28th of April, 1874, the following appropriation of the net earnings of the railroad was made by the corporation: "Resolved, that the net earnings of the company, after the payment of the current expenses, be pledged for repayment of advances obtained by the president, for the purpose of meeting the May interest." It is conceded that this special appropriation of the particular fund named was afterwards violated. Money enough was earned, as we have shown, which, if applied in accordance with the terms of this appropriation, would have sufficed to discharge the claim of Duncan, Sherman & Co., for their advances to the railway company to pay the first mortgage interest. Duncan says that these misapplications were made by the consent of the directors, and it does appear from the proceedings of the directors' meeting, on the fifth of November, 1874, that they approved the absorption of the earnings by Duncan, Sherman & Co., in violation of the appropriation resolution of April 28th. Our position is, that it was not in the power of the company and of Duncan, Sherman & Co. together, to make such a diversion of the earnings contrary to the trust created at the time the money was advanced.

Duncan was a director at the time See his letter

The rights of the bondholders in this particular are supported by the fundamental principle governing the marshaling of assets. The judgment in this case holds that Duncan, Sherman & Co. acquired the coupons, with a continuance of their first mortgage liens on the railroad. It is conceded that there was likewise a special appropriation of the net earnings. Duncan, Sherman & Co. had, therefore, a charge on two funds, on the railroad and the income, and on the fund of the net earnings the bondholders had no charge. It was the duty of Duncan, Sherman & Co. to resort to their special fund of the net earnings, and to satisfy their claims thereout as far as possible before resorting to the common fund, the mortgage liens. The statement of this proposition, it seems to us, is sufficient, without any elaboration of the law involved.

It was not in the power of Duncan, Sherman & Co. to release this fund, even for the benefit of the debtor, or of any third party. If they had done so, they would be debited with the amount so released, and which had thereby been lost to the first mortgage bondholders as a means of satisfying the Duncan coupon claims.

Alston v. Mumford, 1 Brockenborough, 265, Marshall, C. J.

Lanoy v. Duke of Athol, 2 Atkyn, 446.
Ingalls v. Morgan, 6 Selden, 178.
Depeyster v. Hildreth, 2 Barb. Ch., 109.
Herman v. Spelman Nefi's Appeal, 9 W. & S., 36.
Wright v. Petrie, 1 Sm. & M., p. 232.
South v. Bloxam, 2 Hern & Mul., 457.
Bridenbecker v. Lowell, 32 Barb., p. 9.
Welch v. Fames, 22 How. Pr., p. 474.

Upon the principles of marshalling, Duncan having placed the net earnings beyond reach of the bondholders, they are subrogated to his rights as a coupon holder.

Loomas v. Wright, 2 Russ & Myl., p. 769.

Far less could Duncan, Sherman & Co., by any arrangement with the corporation, appropriate this trust fund of the net earnings in whose application the first mortgage bondholders had an interest, to the satisfaction of other claims of Duncan, Sherman & Co.

To resort again to the opinion:

" They [referring to the appellants] say that by the resolution of April 24 the earnings of the road were pledged for the May interest, which is the interest represented by one-half of the coupons in question, and that at all events this interest should have been paid. They also insist that the same construction should apply to the November interest. They contend that this was a specific appropriation of funds, and that Duncan, Sherman & Co., occupying the fiduciary relations toward the company which they did, were bound in equity to carry it out, and had no right to assume the role of purchasers of those coupons."

"It is true the resolution of April pledged the earnings of the road for the advances obtained by the president for the purpose of meeting the May interest, but this pledge was only made for his security, and did not prevent him from paying other debts with such earnings, if he found it expedient and for the company's interest to do so, and even if the company could have insisted on such an appropriation, it did not, but asserted to his purchasing the coupons instead of paying them."

It will be observed that the leared justice who pronounced his opinion, does not seem to have considered the deffect of this special appropriation as constituting two funds for the for the payment of these coupons upon the theory of his own opinion. From the moment that this additional fund was created, it became a trust for the benefit of first mortgage bond holders, and in which they had an interest upon the principle of the marshaling of assets. Either Duncan, Sherman & Co. did not acquire a title to the coupons as against the first mortgage bondholders, or, if they did acquire such title, according to the opinion, then this special appropriation created two funds for the payment of those coupons. Duncan, Sherman & Co., having destroyed the special fund, in which the bondholders has no interest, cannot resort for payment to the common fund. In this connection, the fiduciary relations of Duncan, Sherman & Co., to the creditors and as well as their absolute control of the financial affairs of the corporation, and the fact that this release of the special fund was for their own benefit, all intensify the application of this doctrine of the marshaling of securities against the claims in this instance.

The approbation of Duncan's course, by the debtor, could not affect the equity of the bondholders in any event; far less, when that approbation was virtually Duncan, Sherman's Co., approval of their own acts through their control of the corporate affairs and finances. The amounts of the special appropriation, diverted to their own benefit on other claims, by Duncan, Sherman & Co., should be deducted from the present coupon claim, if it be held to constitute a first mortgage lien. Moreover, the appropriation was renewed in November, and again violated. We do not deem it necessary to elaborate such a familiar principle.

Commonwealth v Ches & O Canal Co 35 Md p 18.
Miller v Morrill 51 Maine, p 9.

The purchasers of bonds after May, 1874, have superior equities to the claims of Duncan Sherman & Co.

This principle involves the currency and security of negotiable bonds. When the officers of a corporation, conceal the inability of the corporate body to pay its mortgage interest and claim that they have acquired the title to the coupons falling due in the interval when such defaults are concealed; the bonds, it must be remembered, with the next accruing coupons, still remain current and negotiable, and pass from hand to hand. What are the rights and equities of the purchaser of bonds under those circumstances? What are the rights of these bondholders, who are shown by the testimony to have bought Mobile and Ohio bonds after May and November, 1874, without the coupons for those dates attached, and supposing that they acquired a First Mortgage lien on the property for the bond and the succeeding coupons? Can these coupons of 1874, which were detached without any open suspension by the corporation, as stated in the opinion, claim a share of the mortgage, as against purchasers in good faith, who bought their securities, relying upon their condition as they appeared when they were passing current in the market?

The holder of the coupons of 1874, conceding that he has every legal right and every equity in his favor, in all other respects is certainly estopped as against the purchasers of the bonds subsequent to these dates. It is by his act, by his concealment of his purchase, that the buyer subsequently is led to pay his money for the bonds upon the faith of their apparent condition. There is also a fraud perpetrated upon such purchasers, irrespective of the amount of the coupons involved, and arising from the concealment of the insolvency of the corporation. The purchaser is thereby induced to pay for the bonds prices demandable for the securities of a solvent corporotion. But we shall consider this under another point.

The equity of the purchaser of the bond under these circumstances is certainly superior to that of the holder of the detached coupon.

If a bona-fide buyer of railroad coupons desires to preserve his rights as against subsequent purchasers, he should, by agreement with the bondholder, affix some notice on the bond itself by means of which parties buying the instrument subsequently may know that they are subject to share their security with claims not apparent on the face of the instrument. Or at least he should give general information of the default through the ordinary sources of publicity, some such evidence of intent as is required upon the dissolution of a partenership; by circular among the bondholders, or advertisements in the newspapers, as will put dealers in the securities on their guard. The principle involved in these facts was determined substantially as above, in the case of Havens vs. The Grand Junction Railroad Company. The Duncan coupons cannot be used as bid money, or paid out of ihe proceeds, until after the specification of the superior equity. 109 Mass. Reports, p. 88.

The Mortgagee's equity to bid for the Property should be enforced through a Trustee, to bid the amount of the First Mortgage.

The position of the appellee is this:

"Whatever may be the decree of the Supreme Court in this cause as to the rights and equities of the respective parties to the litigation, and the priorities of the various incumbrances on the property, we do not care. We will secure a different result, based upon such arrangements as we have chosen to make." They claim that they can so pervert and manipulate the decree that the rights of property secured by the various mortgages, and intended to be enforced by the judgment of the Court, can be entirely nullified and set at defiance by the volition of some of the parties in interest. We regard this as the most important question involved in this litigation. If the theory of the appellees be correct, then an appeal to the Courts of Chancery in the foreclosure of a railroa dmortgage, is absolutely nugatory.

The basis of this position of the appellees, is to be found in this state of facts. They represent a large majority of the First Mortgage claims on the property. They also represent nearly every single contested claim on the property, the coupons and the substitution claims. They represent every claim which this litigation has been prosecuted for two years to defend against. They have obtained what they claim to be an assent from a portion of the paramount incumbrances on the property, to yield a very large measure of their interests in their mortgage.

A new scheme has been devised. It is not the contract of the mortgages in which the appellants acquired their interests. It is confessedly an arrangement designed to do away with the covenants and securities on the faith of which the appellants loaned their money. We shall not now discuss how far the powers given are binding. Those are matters which will come up for adjudication upon a decree of distribution. The only question presented now is, as to the terms which equity, particularly upon nearly a million dollars of bonds which we represented at Circuit, and whose holders have under the terms of the decree felt reluctantly bound to grant those powers requires to be incorporated in the decree of sale.

Miller v Rutland 40 V

The property would not bring the an first mortgage upon the sale under the decree. It is, therefore, apparent, say the appellees, that we will become the purchasers of this property, because we can bid more in first mortgage bonds than anyone would bid in cash ; those first mortgage bonds that we hold say Hays, Dupuy & Pierson, have empowered us to make a new contract with the contested claims; we will carry out this new scheme which has been devised. Those first mortgage bondholders who are desirous to avail themselves of the equity which is conceded in the decree of bidding in the property for bonds that are paramount liens on the estate must necessarily yield to the terms which we have devised under our new scheme, or the privilege which is accorded of bidding in bonds will be absolutely useless to them as a minority, as we have a fixed majority of a limited circulation and issue of the first mortgage securities. Furthermore, as we, Hays, Dupuy & Pierson, have such a large preponderance of the first mortgage claims, as would render it absolutely certain that under the present decree we must become the owners of the property, no one can bid against us. We can bid, say they, more than $7,000,000, out of first mortgage liens of $8,000,000, or in a still larger proportion, perhaps. As the property is not saleable for any amount of cash approaching the sum of $7,000,000, the sale so called under the decree must simply amount to a transfer of this railroad to our ownership.

Therefore, says these appellees, why invoke the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as to what your rights are, when we say we can turn that decision into a brutum fulmen, and settle your rights as we choose, and on behalf of those very contested and inferior claims in respect of which you have expended thousand of dollars and years of litigation in obtaining an adjudication.

This is substantially the position assumed by our opponents in this litigation, and it requires only the statement of that position to show the Court how very serious its consequences would be, if it is held to be tenable. If such a result was capable of consummation irrespective of judicial proceedings, it would have to be suffered.

But the claim is that this is to be attained by and through judicial process, by so framing the Decrees of a Court of Chancery as to secure the desruction t of the very equities it has adjudged. We do not think that a court of conscience is so impotent as to be unable to prevent itself from being made the instrument of such an inequitable proceeding. The question presented by the situation of this case is involved in many of the railroad foreclosures now pending in the various courts throughout the country. It seems to be assumed by the promoters of these various schemes for the enforcement of a new contract different from that provided in the mortgages executed by the corporations that it is within their power to impose these new conditions upon the bondholders, and that the latter are entirely remediless as against a majority. A first mortgage bond upon a railroad is claimed not to be a security for an aliquot interest in the mortgage property, each bond according to its proportion of the entire issue under the mortgage. But it is sought by arrangements devised, pending the foreclosure proceedings, to compel the first mortgage bondholders by a species of quasi judicial duress, to surrender their liens and rights, upon the supposition, and under a theory, which they are fearful to combat, because if combated unsuccessfully the result would be so disastrous. They are told that as the purchasing committee, on behalf of the new scheme for readjusting the liabilities secured on the property, will be the sole bidder at the sale, under a system of bidding in bonds they can obtain title for a mere pittance, and the non-assenting bondholder, who will not give up what he supposed was the best security in which a man could invest his money, a first mortgage bond, on terms dictated by them, will receive a mere trifle in cash. On this account concessions are made by bondholders, accepting a new security or obligation which, though for a much smaller amount than the original security of the bondholder, is still for a much larger nominal amount than they would receive by way of cash dividend on the sale, if the theory of the appellees in this case be correct. Hays, DuPuy and Pierson, propose on behalf of a majority of the bondholders, to issue a new First Mortgage bond of $440 for each outstanding First Mortgage bond of $1,000. The balance of the first mortgage is proposed to be given to claims, which these appellants have been resisting, namely, coupons and substitution claims. This litigation, Hays, Dupuy and Pierson say, can result in nothing substantial for the appellants, because they will bid in the property for the bonds, who have assented to this reduction of their claims.

It will be at once seen that a First Mortgage railroad bond has no secure value, if the theory of the appellees be correct. Considering that there are nearly as many miles of of railroad in this country as in all the rest of the civilized world combined, and considering the large amount of American and foreign capital invested in these enterprises, upon the supposed security of a First Mortgage, the theory propounded is certainly full of vital consequences. Considering further the character of these investments, in many instances for the benefit of trusts, and, in some of the states, held to be legitimate investments for trust estates, as being based upon the security of land, the theory of appellees requires the most careful scrutiny. When a purchaser of these first mortgage railroad bonds intends to lay out his money, his first inquiry is, "what is the amount of the mortgage? How many thousands of dollars of bonds are issued upon each mile of road?" These are the elements that constitute the security—the extent of the property and the amount of the mortgage. When Charles Moran purchased his Mobile and Ohio Railroad bonds, he did so upon the faith of holding a certain number of obligations out of 6,000 obligations constituting the number of bonds issusd to make up a $6,000,000 mortgage. But in this case, as in many other of the railroad foreclosure proceedings that have been initiated since the financial disasters in 1873, the holders of these bonds have been prostrated into submission to these schemes of purchase which, they have been told, were so devised under judicial sanction, that the matter is reduced now to the condition of things in this case. The holder of a $1,000 first mortgage bond of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad is told that he must accept a bond for $440; and this, not because the property is claimed to be unable to bear amount of the sterling bond mortgage, not for any purposes of admistrative benefit which would address themselves to the moral and business convictions of the first mortgage bond holders, but in order that the difference, the loss of his cupital, shall be divided among claims which he considers and inequitable, and which the Court may so consider. Not only is it claimed that the first mortgage bondholders must yield to this partition of their security, but that the distributive proportions must be such as are dictated by a majority.

Does the foreclosure of a railroad mortgage, necessarily produce such a result? If it does, we had far better adopt the English system of jurisprudence on this subject, and hold railroad properties to be so far public instrumentalities, that the sole remedy shall be by the appointment of a receiver, and the farming and perception of the revenues. At least, by this arrangement, the bondholders would get the produce of the property. His paper claims would be unimpaired; the adjudications of the Courts, as to the liens and equities, could be obtained, and when the property reached a more prosperous condition, the benefit of those adjudications could be secured for those who were successful in the contest. But the result above claimed has no legal, logical or practical reason in its support.

Object of Allowing Mortgagees to bid at Foreclosures.

It is quite true that there can be no sale, in any di ju~~id~~cial or practical sense of that term, of a railroad property of the extent of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. There can be no bidders, except to a very limited number, for a railroad 500 miles long. Few persons have the ability to bid any adequate price for a property with $15,000,000 of incmbrance upon it. The theory of judicial sales is, that there is a market for the property to be sold. A judicial sale is an auction sale—a sale to the highest bidder. Bidders are presumed to exist. Competition is supposed to arise. When the railroad system had developed and railroad foreclosures were initiated, it became apparent that such a sale of properties of this such magnitude, under the forms of judicial process, could produce only some wholly inadequate price in cash, which might be paid by a speculator who saw that the mortgagee was incompetent to protect himself.

The results were, therefore, more disastrous to the bondholders who were enforcing railroad mortgages than to any other interest. They were a scattered body, generally holding inconsiderable interests, and in many instances incapable of providing even their small proportion of cash to make up the amount of a bid. As these peculiar difficulties surrounding any attempt to sell property of such magnitude became apparent to the courts, the situation was met by the application of a familiar practice of Courts of Chancery. As the dividend which would be produced by the sale would, after discharging the costs of the proceeding, be distributed among the bondholders themselves, it was clearly innocuous and highly beneficial to permit the mortgagee representing the bondholders to satisfy any bid which he might make for the property in the bonds which would eventually have to be surrendered to the Master. In this way the mortgagee for the bondholders was enabled to protect the property to the amount of the mortgage. This was a highly beneficent provision. No one was injured by its terms. As all the proceeds of the sale would go to the first mortgage to the amount due upon it, no injury was done to the subordinate incumbrancers or the mortgagor. The speculative public had, of course, no equity whatsoever, and no standing in the litigation.

The analysis and clear understanding of this rule, will support the position for which we contend. The object of this provision in decrees of railroad foreclosure and sale, was clearly for the protection of the paramount incumbrances against the fatal effects of an unguarded sale under a chancery decree. It was a protection to the mortgagees against the speculative public. It was, moreover, a protection accorded to all the parties in interest in the paramount incumbrances, proportionately to the amounts of their bonds, and according to the terms of the incumbrances. The execution of such a decree, would simply place the property in the ownership of the first mortgagees, through a trustee according to their equitable interests under the mortgage. If there were 1,000 bonds of $1,000 each, outtstanding, each holder of a bond would have a one-thousandth interest in the fee of the property. The equity of redemption would be foreclosed and cut off by the sale, and if no one bid higher than the amount of the mortgage, the bondholders would become owners of the fee of the railroad as tenants in common, or rather the road would be held by the purchasing trustee for them on that basis.

Mortgagee's privilege of bidding, should be secured to all the bondholders, according to the equities of the Deed of Trust.

We will quote from the opinion of the Circuit Court, premising that it seems to us to sustain in principle fully the position for which we here contend:

" Bondholders secured by a common mortgage have equal rights in the common security, proportionately to the amount held by each. If the mortgage property be sold to a stranger, the proceeds are equally distributed, and perfect justice is done to all. If bondholders putchase the entire property they have an equitable rignt, after satisfying the costs and charges of the litigation and trust to pay the balance in bonds, so far as their own proportion of such balance extends, for it is to come to them. But it is evident that those who singly, or in combination, hold a large portion of the bonds, have a great advantage over the minority, for they can pay their own proportion of the purchase money, which is much the largest in bonds, and have only a small amount of cash to pay, whilst the minority can only pay a small proportion in bonds, and have a large amount to pay in cash, which, as a generality, they are totally unable to pay. This practically puts it in the power of the majority to get the property at a !asge sacrifice, and turn the minority off with a mere pittance. This is inequitible, and to be avoided, if possible."

It appears from the above extract that the learned chancellor perceived that the same result which it was intended to avoid as against the speculative public, by providing for a bid by the mortgagee on the property, would again arise in a different form under an unguarded decree for bond bidding. Whereas, the power given to the mortgagee to bid was intended to protect all the bondholders under the mortgage against a sacrifice of the property to a stranger; the unrestricted ability to bid in bonds, placed it in the power of a combination of a part oj the bondholders to subject the other portion of the interests under the mortgage to their own terms, and probably place them in a worse position than if they had been left to the tender mercies of the speculators who might bid at the sale outside of the mortgage. If the holders of a majority of the First Mortgage Bonds likewise owned the inferior securities, the minority would be at their mercy, and there would practically be a foreclosure against them, instead of in their behalf. This result was apparent, and the only question was as to the means and remedy against it. It will be seen that the opinion concedes that some means should be adopted, and further acknowledges its difficulty in providing for the equities of the case.

It is very palpable, and at the basis of this whole matter, that if the combination of bondholders represented by Hays, Dupuy & Pierson proposed to utilise this power of bidding, given by the decree, according to the terms of the mortgage, there could not possibly be any ground of complaint on the part of the appellants. Hays, DuPuy, and Pierson would then have simply substituted themselves for the trustees of the mortgage, and have become the agents of the bondholders to go through the form of bidding, and would then hold the legal title to the railroad in trust for the security of bondholders under the mortgage, according to its terms, and in the proportion, and with the equities secured by the covenants of the instrument itself, which is the muniment of title for all the proceedings, We say this, even conceding that the claims of Alexander Duncan to the coupons are adjudicated in his favor by this Court. The coupons then would be entitled to an aliquot share of the mortgage estate, according as their amount was proportioned to the entire amount of the first mortgage security. But by an inspection of the record, where the scheme of these appellees is incorporated in a frame work ponderous enough for a new charter for this corporation, it will be seen that this simple result is very far from being adequate to its designs. Furthermore, even conceding the Tennesse substitution claims to be supportedby this Court to their fullest extent, establishing a paramount lien upon the property in Tennessee for the amount claimed by them, it will be seen that this is not sufficient for the purposes of Hays, DuPuy and Pierson. They propose a new mortgage of the entire estate, of which the proportion six-tenths is to be given to the substitution and the Duncan claims, although together these claims amount to less than $2,500,000, while the First Mortgage liens are more than $8,000,000. But the latter are to receive only four-tenths of a new mortgage, while the interest of a minority is to hold six-tenths of such mortgage. There may be, if various reasons and plausible grounds invoked for this new arrangement between the creditors of the corporation. What we contend for here is, that such new covenants among mortgage security holders is a matter for their option and their election, and that no process of a court invoked to enforce the mortgage securities according to the terms and covenants of the original instruments, should be made to subserve the purposes of enforcing a new covenant against those who stand upon their property rights as conserved to them in their original muniments of title.

The very frame work of this scheme of Hays, DuPuy & Pierson, shows that it should become effective only by a mere voluntary action on the part of the bondholders. It purports to be an agreement between the railroad company and its creditors. That is its very ground work. It proposes two means for its accomplishment—one by the unanimous consent of all the creditors and all the stockholders. If that had been obtained, there would have been an end of this litigation. That was an entirely legitimate purpose for an agreement of readjustment of the liabilities of a debtor, and a readjustment among the creditors of their respective claims against a common debtor. Under this head, it purported to address the reason and the convictions of men, in respect of their rights upon this railroad, but in that respect it has been a total failure, and every resource of litigation, which those who were not persuaded and were unwilling to be coerced, have been enabled to invoke, has been invoked against the consummation of the scheme.

But another design is proposed by Hays, DuPuy & Pierson: "If we cannot induce men to give up their rights," say then, "we will force them to do it." If a majority of those who claim first mortgage liens on the property, are willing to unite with us, we will compel the minority to accept those terms." The record shows that they were v~~a~~ery far from succeeding by moral suasion. One million and a half of first mortgage out of an entire outstanding issue of five and a half millions refused to accede to their propositions when the cause was heard at Circuit. As we have shown, the object proposed in allowing the mortgagee to bid for the property, and to satisfy his bid in the bonds of the cestui que trusts, was to protect the bondholders against a sacrifice of the property, which would ensue at a sale for cash. The perversion of this equitable decree, proposed by the appellees, is to sacrifice the interests of the first mortgage bondholders, for the benefit of the subordinate claimants on the property, or for the benefit of one class of paramount lien bondholders, like the Tennessee substitution bonds. This was not the design and spirit of permission to satisfy the bid in bonds. That was intended for the equal benefit of all the first mortgage bondholders. so that each bond might secure the same pro- in the bid which he had in the mortgage.

Bradley v Tyson 33 Mich. 392

Remedies which should be applied to secure the benefits ~~of~~ to a mortgagee of the equities decreed and ~~bid~~ the benefit of bonding to all the bondholders proportionately to their interests in the mortgage.

The means and the equitable processes to secure this result are simply and ordinary, and in the accustomed exercise or the powers of a chancellor. The Circuit Court, in order to establish its purpose of protecting the bondholders upon the sale to the amount of their mortgage, could have ordered the property to have been bid in by a trustee for the paramount lien holders who would be authorized to bid the amount of the first lien, with provision for satisfying his bid in first mortgage securities. The purchasing trustee would then hold the property, in trust, for the benefit of all the bondholders, and if the lien of the Duncan coupons is sustained for the benefit likewise of those coupons as a part of the first mortgage. He would be trustee for each security holder under the first mortgage for the amount of his interest in the bonds or coupons as it might be. This would indeed be a fair and just and equitable foreclosure. It would be the accomplishment of the same result as ensued in the case of a strict foreclosure under the usual process of chancery jurisprudence down to a late period. What reasonable objection could be urged to this decree? Who would be injured by it? No first mortgage bondholder, no coupon holder, if his coupons were decided to be a part of the first mortgage, because they would have their exact and just rights according to their interest in the mortgage. The subordinate incumbrancer could not object, he would have his day to redeem, and if he did not redem, it would be either because he did not consider the property worth redeeming, or was unable to redeem. When the time of sale arrived he could bid more than the amount of the first lien. The only objection which could be urged by Hays, DuPuy, and Pierson, to this fair and reasonable execution of a decree of foreclosure would be that certain subordinate or disputed claims which they represented would not have as large an interest in the property, after such a foreclosure as they would have if the Court were to do what they desire, which amounts to nothing more than registering a transfer of the railroad to them, and compelling all the first mortgage bondholders to submit to their dictation as to the quantum of interest these shall have in the bid. Hays, DuPuy and Pierson could not object in the sole interest of the first mortgage and the coupon claims they represent to such a method of bidding in the property, except that they would not be the trustees in possession after such a bid.

Their principal objection would probably be on the score of the Tennessee substitution claims, which they represent, on account of the great distributive share it is proposed to give them on the *re*organization. In considering this matter it must be borne in mind that the road is to be bid in as an entirety under the decrees in both of these causes, in Alabama and Tennessee, for the purpose of carrying out this scheme of a new division of the property according to the equities propounded by Hays, Du Puy & Pierson. When the Court has become possessed of the Tennessee case, it will see the great injustice of the scheme proposed. If this Court should decree, as we believe it will, that the Tennessee Substitution Bonds are subordinate claims to the first mortgage bonds, and that the old Tennessee bonds hold the paramount lien on the property in Tennesse, what will the position of the first mortgage bondholders be according to this scheme? Unless such a protection, as we propose be accorded to them, under the decree as it stands, and the transfer of the road to Hays et al., they will have to share an alleged first mortgage on the property with the substitution claims as required by Hays et al., and thereafter be subject to the large lien amounting, with interest, to about $1,500,000, in favor of the old Tennessee bonds. That is, after this Court has decided that the Tennessee substitution claims are subordinate to us, and not, as they claim, to be paramount to the first mortgage, that decision is to be nullified, and we are to be forced to share our incumbrance on the property with a claim which this Court will have decided, belongs to an entirely different class of bonds from the class which is endeavoring in the Tennessee suit to enforce an ownership. We are thereafter to be subject to the real owners of the Tennessee lien.

Some protection should be afforded against this. A trustee should be ordered to stand before the Master at the sale of this property and and execute the intent and purpose of this most benificent provision of a decree of railroad foreclosure, and bid the amount of the First Mortgage payable in bonds, to be delivered to the master within a fixed period of time. It is quite true that it would be a great wrong to all the parties interested in the First Mortgage. that this property should be put up at auction to be sold to the highest cash bidder. None of the bills that have been filed in this case were, therefore, framed solely to aid in the execution of the powers in the mortgage. It was conceded on all hands, that the mere enforcement of those specific powers would not afford sufficient equitable relief to the cestuis que trust. The inherent powers of a Court of Chancery were invoked; receivers were constituted; decrees were prayed for and obtained, under the inherent powers of a Court of Equity. The appellees proposed the decree authorizing bond bidding; it is only by leave of Court that any mortgage interest can bid at the sale. There can, therefore, be no question of the power of a Court of Chancery in this case, if in any, to frame this decree, so as to work out that equality, which Courts of Equity love so greatly, and to carry into execution the real purpose which the Chancellor always has in view in permitting the mortgage interest to become bidders for the property. Certainly this Court can make such orders "as the justice of the case may require." The dangers which the decree was calculated to produce, and against which we have appealed to this Court, were presented to the learned Chancellor below. We think that the following language of the opinion of the learned Justice presents a sufficient support for the remedy which we now invoke:

"Perhaps the most equitable mode of disposing of the property when practicable, when it cannot

Jones 1635

May order sale on credit-

Stoney v Shultz

1 Hill Sc. Co. Ch

455. 500

be sold for cash to an amount sufficient to pay the bondholders,* is to decree a strict foreclosure, in which all will participate alike, or to make a sale for the equal benefit of all the bondholders who choose to come in and participate. A strict foreclosure may be attended with difficulties in those States where a mortgage is a mere security and does not give a legal title, besides which, it places the property in the hands of a vast number of beneficiaries, whose consent may be very difficult to obtain in perfecting a new organization for conducting the business, whilst a sale for the benefit of all is attended with the difficulty of determining who shall make the bid. The Court has sometimes authorized the trustees of the mortgage to bid for the bondholders. In this case it is obvious that one class or the other of the bondholders would be dissatisfied with any selection of trustees which the Court might make."

We are perfectly willing to take this statement as our text. As regards a strict foreclosure we do not think that the objection suggested by the learned Justice is based upon the real state of the jurisprudence of those States where the road runs ; even if that jurisprudence can control the remedial processes of the Federal Courts. In Alabama, where the cause is pending, a strict foreclosure may be had. It is within the powers of the Courts of Equity to decree one, particularly where the property cannot bring the amount of the first mortgage.

This being so, under the decision of this Court, in the case of Miller against Dows, 94 U. S. a perfect title could have been obtained to the road in the several states through which it runs. A conveyance could have been compelled from the corporation, and this would have given a sufficient legal title to the road as an entirety. A somewhat similar case involving the principle was lately decided in the same circuit.

Wilmar vs. Atlanta & Richmond Air Line Railroad Co., 2 Woods.

But if there be any difficulty in a strict foreclosure, under the local laws of any jurisdiction controlling this property, all the beneficial results to be obtained from a strict foreclosure will be secured by a sale at which a trustee will be ordered to bid the amount of the first mortgage. The suggestion in the opinion that there might be some dissatisfaction with the selection of the trustees to make this bid seems to be about the only objection that was in the mind of the Court. Probably the appointment of anyone of the litigants in this case to make that bid and execute the trust connected with it would be unsatisfactory to the other litigants. But certainly this cannot be claimed to be a tenable reason why a Court of Equity should not provide for the execution of such a trust. Certainly, if the Court deemed that it was equitable and just that the first mortgage bondholders should be protected equally and all alike, and that this could be accomplished by selecting a trustee who should bid in the road for them under the terms and on the basis of their mortgage, and hold the property in trust for them, and administer it until they gave further directions and agreed upon a new trust. Certainly such a vital measure of protection and justice should not be allowed to fail by a Court of Equity for want of a trustee. If neither Duncan nor Ketcham did satisfy the respective parties, certainly a special trustee could be nominated to execute this decree. It is fundamental that a Court of Equity will not allow a trust to fail for want of a trustee. The remainder of the reasoning contained in the opinion of the Circuit Court in favor of the new contracts proposed in lieu of the first mortgage contract under which we claim probably furnishes the key to the decision of the Circuit Court. We regret that the learned justice arrived at the conclusion which he reached, in reference to the character of this scheme of reorganization proposed by Hays, DuPay and Pierson. He certainly would not have reached that conclusion, if he had heard the Tennessee branch of the case, which is an integral part of the whole determination of the equities of this litigation. But certainly it cannot be urged, that because we differ from the Circuit Court in our estimate of the fairness and equitable character of the new contracts, which the appellees have proposed to us, that, therefore, we should not have the same full measure of protection which the Circuit Court deemed just and proper, in Chancery decrees of this character. We should be treated just the same as if there had been no scheme of reorganization. We claim that that is a matter entirely outside of this case. It is not the contract under which we loaned our money. It is not the security which we took. To have saved the expense of the annoyances of litigation, certainly our clients would have yielded to the terms proposed by our opponents, if they could have brought their minds to acknowledge any fairness in it. The appellants did not propose to deprive any one of his interest in this property. They proposed a plan, by which the road could be purchased, and every one have a share in it, according to the legal order of his priority. They believe that the security on which the various creditors of this property loaned their money was not only the legal, but the just and fair and proper measure of their interest in it. They proposed this plan, but they did not propose to force any one to accept it, far less a first mortgage bondholder. But all plans for the future administration of this property have really no bearing upon the issues in a Court sitting to enforce the security as it now stands. We merely call attention to the remarks of the Circuit Court in reference to this new scheme or reorganization, so called, in connection with the following sentence of the opinion.

"Looking at the difficulties which beset the subject on every side, we think that if we allow the non-subscribing bondholders to participate in the purchase of the property, should it be made in behalf of the mortgaging combination, on an equal footing with those who have joined it, that we shall have done all that we can do under the circumstances to protect their interests."

Our position is that we should not be placed on an equal footing with "a mortgaging combination." We should be placed on the footing of our mortgage security as it stands and not as it is proposed that it may stand after the sale of this property. We revert again to the remarks of the Circuit Court:

"Perhaps the most equitable mode of disposing of the property when practicable, &c., is to make a sale for the equal benefit of all the bondholders who choose to come in and participate."

"A sale for the benefit of all is attended with the difficulty of determining who shall make the bid."

When the difficulty is so very slight, and the equities to be subserved so very great, we submit that the course out of the difficulty is by the broad and straight path, and not by the narrow and crooked one, which Hays, Du Puy & Pierson proposed to us.

There is no practicable objection to such a measure. It is too common for the practical objections to be very great. Of course, if there is a single mortgagee and he bids in the property, he has the sole control of it. If the property is bid in trust for a hundred bondholders interested in the mortgage, the trustees hold for them according as their interests are fixed by their contract of mortgage and by the number of bonds that they own.

Suppose Hays, DuPuy and Pierson bid in this property, they would likewise hold it as trustees but for the benefit of the subscribers to their agreement. They would have to run the railroad, and administer its affairs as individual trustees under their combination. they would have to obtain acts of incorporation. They would have to do just what any single or any three special trustees who might be nominated to bid in this property according to the adjudication of the priorities made by this Court would do.

The difference in the results is that in the one case the priorities, whatever they may be as determined by the Court, will be secured to the cestuis que trust; in the other the remedies provided for the above purpose will be made to subserve the overturning of the adjudicated equities.

Certainly whatever doubt might be in this respect to the powers of the Circuit Court in regard to the framing of a decree to work out the adjudicated equities, there can be no question of the power of this Court in the premises. The 701st section of the revised statutes providing for decrees of this Court on review empower it to reverse, modify or make such other order as the justice of the case may require. We have had in this very cause a pronouncement upon the breadth and depth of that power.

Requiring that the road shall not be sold for less than an upset price, affords an alternative remedy for the protection of all the bondholders.

There is but one other modicum of justice which might be proved in lieu of a trustee bid for the first mortgage bondholders. That is a provision, that the property shall not be sold for less than the amount of the first mortgage bonds and interest, making the amount of the first mortgage as adjudicated by this Court the Upset Price below which the property shall not be sold. This would afford those bondholders, those who are specially appellants, as well as those who have not united with either party to this cause, with some measure of protection as against being forced to become bidders, according to the reduction of their rights, produced by Hays DuPuy.

If the protection is not to be accorded of a mortgagee bid in trust, for the equal benefit of the mortgage interest as it now stands, and bondholders do not choose to enter into a new contract for the surrender of six-tenths of their interests in the property, those who do propose such a new contract, should not be allowed to do as the learned judge said, they might "turn the minority off with a mere pittance," they getting the property at a large sacrifice. They propose to divide the property among all classes of claims, placing contested claims on an equality with the first mortgage. In carrying out this project it is but just and fair that they are like all other bidders on the property should not be allowed to use this decree as a process against first mortgage bondholders for the benefit, either of subordinate incumbrances, or even any one class of First Mortgage bondholders, like the Substitution Claims against the First Mortgage bondholders. To provide against this result, an upset price affords a relief, as between the alternative of a bid in trust for all the first mortgage lienholders. So far as Hays, DuPuy & Pierson represent first mortgage lien holders, an upset price is equivalent to a trust bid for the general benefit, and would be as beneficial to them, as to all the bondholders getting their aliquat share of the security. Whereas, if an upset price is required to be bid, and Hays, DuPuy, & Pierson desire to carry out their scheme for the benefit of subordinate claims, they would have to provide enough cash to pay the appellants their bonds and interest in full, or at such rate as the Court deems a reasonable upset price.

As a minium relief, Appellants should be allowed to participate in any Bond bid.

If all other relief be denied appellants, they should be admitted in the purchasing scheme lastly. However, the Court may decide the equities of this cause, if everything be adjudged against the appellants; we mean that if not only the priorities of lien be affixed, as the appellees claim, in respect to the coupons and the substitution bonds, but if in addition this Court should refuse our appeal in respect of the above equitable terms and methods for the enforcement of the decree according to the existing contracts, and should leave the practical determination of the equities of the cestuis que trust to Hays, Dupuy & Pierson, then we claim not to be sacrificed to the enforcement of our right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. The record shows that we represented at circuit about a million dollars of the first mortgage bonds, for all of them we sought an appeal to this Court. For all of them we sought the protection which we deemed Courts of Equity had always accorded to every cestui que trust in similar cases--the option to participate in such a mortgaging combination, as described in the opinion, down to the time of its enforcement. The Circuit Court first held, or to be more accurate, suggested that we should have, down to the day of sale, to elect, whether to accept this new contract, or the pittance that would be left for us if we did not accept. The learned Justice seemed to be under the impression that he had no power to compel the general admission of the first mortgage bondholders into this scheme of bidding under the decree, and upon opposition from Hays, Dupuy & Pierson, the time was limited to the first of September, 1877. The appeal was prosecuted, and of course it was apparent that it conld not be heard by the first of September, because the Supreme Court did not meet until the middle of October.

Moran Brothers and those bond holders who desire no more than the rights of any American citizen, a hearing before this Court cannot now of the decree, even get the new purchase money bonds for 44cents on the dollar for their claims, but it is claimed must take the pittance of cash dividend to accrue. They will thus have suffered greviously by exercising their rights of appeal. This is not the result, we think, which this Court will pernit. The doubts of which the Court, in reference to its power to enforce the fullest liberty of participating in any scheme of purchase, coupled with the use of bonds as bid money, by leave of the Court, were not, we think, justified by the authorities. But, as we have stated above, certainly this Court, under the power to make such order as the justice of the case may require, is entirely unhampered by any such restrictions.

E. L. ANDREWS,
GEORGE HOADLY,
E. H. GRANDIN,
Of Counsel.

Supreme Court United States.

No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM

vs.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN AND OTHERS.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF

CARLTON C. RANDALL,

Petitioner.

— BY —

JNO. J. MACKINNON,
LEOPOLD WALLACH,
Counsel.

Thomas McGill & Co., Printers.

STATEMENT.

The question presented by the petition is: Whether a State, while acting as trustee for creditors of a railroad company, in pursuance of a statute, in the nature of a contract, passed by the legislature of the State, and giving such creditors a specific, paramount, first and prior lien on the railroad and property of the company, for the payment of money by the company, can or has the right or power, before the debt is satisfied, to annul the lien by a subsequent statute, and irreparably destroy the vested rights of the creditors, without their knowledge, consent, or assent, and against their will?

This is exactly what the State of Tennessee, while acting as trustee, under a statute of its own Legislature, attempted to do for the railroad companies therein as against the creditors holding such liens.

The petitioner, and those holding like rights and liens, are the victims of this action.

Learning this fact within a few weeks past for the first time, and being advised that this act is attempted to be further solemnized by practicing a fraud on this honorable court, these creditors, "amicus curiæ," filed their petition herein, and most respectfully ask to be heard by their counsel, that the fraud thus attempted may be presented and made known to the court, and that upon consideration of the facts—each and all of which are fully supported and corroborated by the record and exhibits referred to in the principal case—the court will pass upon and give construction to the statute under which this paramount first and prior lien is asserted.

FACTS.

The facts are few, plain, and simple. They will be presented in chronological order.

On the 11th day of February, A. D. 1852, the Legislature of Tennessee passed an act entitled "An act to establish a system of internal improvements in this State."

The first section of this act recites, in substance, that whenever a chartered railroad company should have procured bona-fide subscriptions for the capital stock thereof to an amount sufficient to grade, bridge, and prepare for the iron rails the whole of the trunk line proposed to be constructed in the State of Tennessee, and it should be shown by the company to the Governor that the subscriptions were good and solvent, and that the company had graded, bridged, and was ready to put down timbers for rails, and fully prepared a section of thirty miles of the road at either terminus in a good and substantial manner, with good material, and the Governor should be notified of these facts, and that said section or any part thereof was not subject to any lien whatever other than those created in favor of the State by the acts of 1851–52, that then the Governor should issue to said company coupon-bonds of the State of Tennessee to an amount not exceeding eight thousand dollars per mile—and on no other condition—which bonds should be payable at such place in the United States as the president of the company might designate, bearing interest at six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and not having more than forty or less than thirty years to mature.

The third section reads as follows:

> "SEC. 3. Be it enacted, That so soon as the bonds of the State shall have been issued for the first section of the road as aforesaid, THEY shall constitute a lien on said section so prepared as aforesaid, including the road bed, right of way, grading, bridges, and masonry, upon all the stock subscribed for in said company, and upon said iron rails, chairs, spikes, and equipments, when purchased and delivered. And the State of Tennessee, upon the issuance of said bonds, and by virtue of the same, shall be invested with said lien or mortgage without a deed from the company, for the payment by the company of said bonds, with the interest thereon as the same becomes due."

The fourth section of the act directs, that upon the completion of a second section, or any additional number of sections, of twenty miles, in accordance with the requirements of section one, the Governor should issue in like manner bonds of the State to the company.

It is further declared by section four as follows:

> "And after the Governor shall have issued bonds for the first section of the road, it shall not be lawful for said company to give, create, or convey to any person or persons, or body corporate whatever, any lien, incumbrance, or mortgage of any kind which shall have priority over or come in conflict with the lien of the State herein secured; and any such lien, incumbrance, or mortgage shall be null and void as against said lien or mortgage of the State, and the said lien or mortgage of the State shall have priority over all other claims existing, or to exist, against said company."

Section five of the act declares:

> "SEC. 5. Be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of said company to deposit in the Bank of Tennessee, at Nashville, at least fifteen days before the interest becomes due from time to time upon said bonds issued as aforesaid, an amount sufficient to pay such interest, including exchange and necessary commissions, or satisfactory evidence that said interest has been paid or provided for; and if said company fail to deposit said interest as aforesaid, or furnish the evidence aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller to report that fact to the Governor, and the Governor shall immediately appoint some suitable person or persons, at the expense of the company, to take possession and control of said railroad and all the assets thereof, and manage the same and receive the rents, issues, profits, and dividends thereof, AND PAY OVER the same, under the direction of the Governor, towards the liquidation of such unpaid interest."

Section four further directs that if the company should fail or refuse to deliver the road and property to such receiver, that then the Governor should issue his warrant to the sheriffs of the counties through which the road should run, and that the sheriffs should at once put the receiver in possession.

Section four further directs as follows:

> "The Comptroller is authorized, and it is made his duty, upon his warrant to draw from the treasury any sum of money necessary to meet the interest on such bonds as provided for in this act."

Section six provides a remedy, by application to the Court of Chancery or Circuit Courts, to enforce payment of SAID bonds when THEY fall due:

> "SEC. 6. Be it enacted, That if said company shall fail or refuse to pay any of SAID BONDS when THEY fall due, it shall be the duty of the Governor to notify the Attorney-General of the district in which is situated the place of business of said company of the fact, and thereupon said Attorney-General shall forthwith file a bill against said company, in the name of the State of Tennessee, in the Chancery or Circuit Court of the county in which is situated said place of business, setting forth the facts, and thereupon said court shall make all such orders and decrees in said cause as may be deemed necessary by the court, to receive the payment of said bonds, with the interest thereon, AND TO INDEMNIFY THE STATE OF TENNESSEE AGAINST ANY LOSS ON ACCOUNT OF THE ISSUANCE OF SAID BONDS, by ordering the said railroad to be placed in the hands of a receiver, ordering the sale of said road and all the property and assets attached thereto or belonging to said company, or in such other manner as the court may deem best for the interest of the State."

Section 7 reads as follows:

"SEC. 7. Be it enacted, That, at the end of five years after the completion of said road, said company shall set apart one per centum per annum upon the amount of bonds issued to the company, and shall use the same in the purchase of bonds of the State of Tennessee, which bonds the company shall pay into the treasury of the State, AFTER ASSIGNING THEM to the Governor, and for which said Governor shall give said company a receipt; and as between the State and said company, the bonds so paid in shall be a credit on the bonds issued to the company. And bonds so paid in, and the interest accruing thereon, from time to time, shall be held and used by the State as a sinking-fund for the bonds issued to the company, and should said company repurchase any of the bonds issued to it under the provisions of this act, THEY shall be a credit as aforesaid and CANCELED."

The 12th section of this act reads as follows:

"SEC. 12. Be it enacted, That the State of Tennessee expressly reserves the right to enact by the Legislature thereof, hereafter, all such laws as may be deemed necessary to protect the interest of the State against any loss in consequence of the issuance of bonds under the provisions of this act, but in such manner as not to impair the vested rights of the stockholders of the company."

The acts amendatory, referred to in the petition, in no manner or way alter, abridge, or repeal the act of February 11, 1852, except by giving to the railroad companies more bonds and longer time for completion of their roads than they were entitled to under that act. Each and all of the acts amendatory refer to the act of February 11, 1852, and distinctly state that the additional privileges granted are and shall be subject to that act.

These acts amendatory will be found in the following session laws of the State of Tennessee:

Act December 16, 1853, Session Laws 1853–'54, p. 208.

Act February 8, 1854, Session Laws 1854–'55, p. 205.

Act February 8, 1855, Session Laws 1855–'56, pp. 63–67, 92, 467.

Act October 31, 1855, Session Laws 1855–'56, p. 41.

Act March 14, 1860, Session Laws 1860–'61, p. 56.

Under, in pursuance of, and in strict accordance with the act of February 11, 1852, and acts amendatory and prior to the 6th day of July, A. D. 1861, the State of Tennessee issued and delivered to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company 1,296 bonds, each for the sum of $1,000, payable thirty years after date thereof, with interest semi-annually, at the rate of six per centum per annum. The railroad company, accepted, received, and sold these bonds, and, with the money obtained therefor, finished and equipped its railroad, which has ever since been in successful operation.

On the 25th day of February, A. D. 1869, the Legislature of Tennessee passed an act entitled "An act to liquidate the State debt contracted in aid of railroad companies in the State of Tennessee." (Session Laws, , p. .)

The object of this act, as between the State and the railroad company, is no concern of ours, except so far as it is pretended and claimed that it had the effect to destroy and annul our lien under the act of February 11, 1852.

That our vested rights could thus, without our knowledge, consent, or assent, be destroyed, we most emphatically and respectfully deny.

At the commencement of the late rebellion the State of Tennessee had an outstanding bond indebtedness of about $23,000,000.

At the date of the act of February 25, 1869, the debt of the State of Tennessee had so increased as to amount to about $46,000,000.

In view of the magnitude of this most extravagant debt, the State of Tennessee concluded to do something to relieve itself. Therefore the Legislature passed the act of February 25, 1869. Obviously, the object of this act was, in effect, to destroy the security of the holders of the original bonds, and compel them to accept bonds from the railroad companies.

Many holders of the original bonds, including petitioner, who believed that they had and possessed a paramount first and prior lien on the railroad and property of the company as a vested contract right, that could not be taken away or destroyed by any subsequent act of the Legislature, refused to accept bonds under the act of February 25, 1869, in lieu of the bonds held by them and issued under the act of February 11, 1852.

The scheme of the act of February 25, 1869, was very adroit, and, although intended, probably, as a means to relieve the State, was, at the same time, a plan of operation whereby the railroad manipulators of that day were to be enabled to obtain a large property at a nominal cost.

This feature unblushingly presents itself with cloven-foot throughout the entire record.

As appears by the petition, there is now due and owing from the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company to petitioner, and other like holders of the bonds issued under the act of February 11, A. D. 1852, a very large amount of interest, which interest-money, by virtue and by the express terms of that act, constitutes a paramount first and prior lien on the road and property of the company in the State of Tennessee, and which the company and the State neglect, fail, and refuse to pay.

With the other litigants in the case we have no concern. Their rights, whatever they may be, accrued subsequent to our lien, and by express terms thereof, as well as by the act of February 11, 1852, are subject and secondary to the lien of our bonds.

As presented and made known by the petition, Carlton C. Randall was not in anywise made a party to these proceedings, and had no knowledge, notice, or information thereof, until long after the appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the western district of Tennessee to this honorable court. Consequently, it was impossible for him to make application to be permitted to become a party in the suit before the Circuit Court. Therefore he makes application here, at the earliest possible moment, as "amicus curiæ," and as such most respectfully asks to be heard by his counsel.

ARGUMENT.

The general questions presented by the petition may be thus resolved:

1st. The statute of Tennessee. entitled "AN ACT TO ESTABLISH A SYSTEM OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN THIS STATE, PASSED FEBRUARY 11, 1852," constituted and made the bonds issued thereunder to railroad companies in the State a first, paramount, and prior lien on the railroads and property of the company to which they were issued.

2d. The bonds issued in aid of railroad companies in and by the State of Tennessee, under and in pursuance of the act of the Legislature of that State passed February 11, 1852, entitled "AN ACT TO ESTABLISH A SYSTEM OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN THIS STATE," when issued by the State and received and sold by the companies, were contracts, and as such constituted express liens, in the nature of a mortgage, on the railroad and other property of the companies, and could not be affected by any subsequent act of the Legislature, without the consent or assent of the holders of such bonds.

These propositions will be discussed in their order.

I.

THE STATUTE OF TENNESSEE, ENTITLED "AN ACT TO ESTABLISH A SYSTEM OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN THIS STATE. PASSED FEBRUARY 11, 1852," CONSTITUTED AND MADE THE BONDS ISSUED THEREUNDER TO RAILROAD COMPANIES OF THE STATE A FIRST, PARAMOUNT, AND PRIOR LIEN ON THE RAILROAD AND PROPERTY OF THE COMPANY TO WHICH THEY WERE ISSUED.

That the bonds issued to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company by the State of Tennessee, under and in pursuance of the act of February 11, 1852, and now outstanding, do constitute a first, paramount, and prior lien on the road and all property of the company in the State, needs only a reference to the act as it stands on the statute-book—a public law, giving notice to all the world:

> "SEC. 3. Be it enacted, That so soon as the bonds of the State shall have been issued for the first section of the road as aforesaid, THEY shall constitute a lien upon said section so prepared as aforesaid, including the road-bed, right of way, grading, bridges, and masonry, upon all the stock subscribed for in said company and upon said iron rails, chairs, spikes, and equipments when purchased; and the State of Tennessee, upon the issuance of said bonds and by virtue of the same, shall be invested with said lien or mortgage, for the payment by said company of said bonds, with interest thereon as the same becomes due."

Can there by any doubt, in view of this plain language, written in pure English, what constitutes the lien, or on what the lien is intended to fasten?

What thing, according to the act, gives the lien? Let the words of the act answer:

> "So soon as the bonds of the State shall have been issued, THEY shall constitute a lien."

Then, according to the language of the act, the bonds are the THING that in fact constitute the lien.

The bonds are made the PRINCIPAL THING; the lien the incident. According to every rule of law, logic, and equity, the principal is superior to the incident. Without the bonds there would be no lien. The issuance by the State and acceptance of the bonds by the railroad company are what created the lien in accordance with the declaration of the statute. THEY are the lien.

What property is covered by and subject to this lien? The statute, section 3, says the lien is upon—

> "The road-bed, right of way, grading, bridges, and masonry, all stock subscribed for in said company, the iron rails, chairs, spikes, and equipment, when purchased and delivered."

It is positively declared that although the bonds constitute the lien, that lien is not directly invested in the bondholders. The law invests the State with the lien. As the lien is merely the incident and the bond the principal, it may with propriety be asked for what purpose was the State vested with this lien? and in answer to this inquiry, we again beg leave to refer to the statute:

> "And the State of Tennessee, upon the issuance of said bonds and by virtue of the same, shall be invested with said lien or mortgage, without a deed from the company, FOR THE PAYMENT BY SAID COMPANY OF SAID BONDS, WITH INTEREST THEREON AS THE SAME BECOMES DUE."

Thus it appears that the object and purpose for which the State of Tennessee, by the statute, became invested with this lien, was "for the payment by said company of said bonds, with interest thereon as the same becomes due."

Here, then, we have, in clear, defined, and well-expressed language, the thing that of itself constitutes, and was made by the statutory contract, the lien. Next we have the thing to which this lien attached. Then we have the name of the trustee—the State, which was and is invested with the lien; and, lastly, we have, in clear and distinct terms, the object for which the State was so invested.

Is further argument necessary to show that the bonds constitute and make the lien? That the bonds are the principal, the lien the incident; that the bonds are the thing that gave the lien; that the railroad and property of the company was subject to that lien; that the State, as trustee for the bondholders, and for its own indemnity, was invested as trustee with that lien; and that the object of the lien was to secure the payment of the bonds and interest by the railroad company?

But these facts are further demonstrated by the act of February 11, 1852.

SECTION 5 declares "That it shall be the duty of the company to deposit in the Bank of Tennessee, at Nashville, at least fifteen days before the interest becomes due, from time to time, upon said bonds issued as aforesaid, an amount sufficient to pay such interest, including exchange and necessary commissions, or satisfactory evidence that said interest has been paid or provided for."

For whose benefit was this money to be deposited or paid—the bondholders'? It was to be paid by the railroad company, not by the State. Thus again it appears that the debt created by the issuance of the particular bonds is not A DEBT of the State, but A DEBT of the railroad company.

As further evidence of this fact, we refer to section six of the act:

"SECTION 6. Be it enacted, That if said company shall fail or refuse to pay any of said bonds when they fall due, it shall be the duty of the Governor to notify the Attorney-General of the district in which is situated the place of business of the company of the fact, and thereupon the Attorney-General shall forthwith file a bill against said company, in the name of the State of Tennessee, in the Chancery or Circuit Court of the county in which is situated said place of business, setting forth the facts, and thereupon said court shall make all such orders and decrees in said cause as may be deemed necessary by the court to receive the payment of said bonds, with the interest thereon, and TO INDEMNIFY the State of Tennessee against any loss on account of the issuance of said bonds."

In view of these plain, positive, and unmistakable declarations of the statute, we most respectfully ask, is argument or the citation of authorities required to elucidate the proposition that the act of February 11, 1852, is a contract as between the State, the railroad company, and holders of the bonds, or that the particular bonds issued to and received by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, under and in pursuance of that act, constitute liens on the railroad and all property of the company in the State of Tennessee, and that each and every holder and owner of such bonds now outstanding has a first, paramount, and prior lien thereon for the payment of said bonds?

"A contract," says Judge Marshall, in the case of Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 137, "is a compact between two or more persons, and is either executory or executed. An executory contract is one in which a party binds himself to do or not to do a particular thing. A contract executed is one in which the object of the contract is performed, and this, says Blackstone, differs in nothing from a grant. A contract executed, as well as one that is executory, contains obligations binding on the parties. A grant in its own nature amounts to an extinguishment of the right of the grantor, and implies a contract not to reassert the right."

This language was used in reference to a grant of land by the Governor of a State under a legislative act. These bonds were issued and delivered by the Governor of Tennessee, under an act of the Legislature of that State, passed February 11, 1852. This definition, like all things said by the great jurist who delivered the opinion of the cuurt, is simple and unambiguous, and determines in an unequivocal manner that the grant of powers or privileges by a State is a contract within the restrictive clause of the Constitution, and implies an agreement not to resume the rights granted. Is the act under consideration wanting in any of the elements of a good contract?

Probably the most accurate definition of a contract by legislative grant, anywhere to be met with, is that laid down by Mr. Justice Washington, in the great case of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheaton, 643.

The learned judge, after stating that the question was whether the charter granted to Dartmouth College on the 13th of December, 1769, was to be considered as a contract, then asks what is a contract? —and in answer says:

> "It may be defined to be a transaction between two or more persons, in which each party comes under obligation to the other, and each reciprocally acquires a right to whatever is promised by the other. The ingredients necessary to form a contract are: parties, consent, and obligation to be created and dissolved."

Apply this definition to the case at bar:

First, we have the act, or grant of legislative aid to the railroad.

Then the act makes this aid, when granted, a lien on the railroad and property of the company.

Next, we have the declaration of the act, that the railroad company shall pay the interest and principal on the bonds of the State giving such aid, and that if the railroad company neglects, fails, or refuses so to do, it shall be put into the hands of a receiver, and compelled so to do. To enforce this duty, the State, as trustee for the bondholders and as indemnity to itself, is invested with plenary powers.

Is not this a contract between the State, the railroad company, and the holders and owners of the particular bonds issued by the State to the railroad company, and by the railroad company sold on the faith that the act gave the purchasers a first, paramount, and prior lien?

Here we have the legislative authority or grant, parties, consent, and obligation. What other ingredients are needed? None!

By the express words of the statute, the bonds constitute the lien.

The lien is on the railroad and property of the company in Tennessee.

True, the lien is invested in the State; but for what purpose? To secure payment of the interest and principal by the railroad company of the bonds at maturity to the holders, and indemnify the State against loss on account of the issuance thereof. Like the prayer of a bill in chancery, it is the object and purpose of a law that determines its character. The debt evidenced by the bonds is the debt of the railroad company, not the debt of the State.

The railroad company accepted and received the bonds as a matter of AID in the days of its need. It sold the bonds, took the money proceeds thereof, and with it built and equipped its railroad; and now, like an honest corporation, turns to its creditors, and says it does not owe the bonds; you must look to the State; and the State, being bankrupt, cannot pay.

It is a rule of equality, old as the hills, and equitable as it is ancient, "That whosoever taketh the benefit, should also share the burden;" "Cujus est commodum ejus debet esse incommodum."

That the outstanding bonds issued by the State of Tennessee to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company constitute and are first, paramount, and prior liens on the road and property of the company, in the nature of contracts, that cannot be annulled by any subsequent act of the Legislature, is fully established by analogy of fact and the profound reasoning of the following cases:

Wabash and Erie Railroad Company v. Breds, 2 Black, 453.
Von Hoffman v. The City of Quincy, 4 Wall., 535.
Bailey v. The Mayor and City of New York, 3 Hill, 539.
Moodalay v. The East India Co., 1 Brown's Ch. R., 469.
Saylors v. Saylors et al., 3 Tennessee, 525.
Moses v. Murgalroyd, 1 Johns. Ch. R., 119.
Phillips v. Thompson, 2 Johns. Ch. R., 418.
Ten Eyck v. Holmes, 3 Sandford's Ch., 428.
Aldrich v. Martin, 4 R. I., 520.
Keys v. Brush, 2 Paige, 311.
Everston v. Booth, 19 Johns., 486.
Pratt v. Adams, 7 Paige, 628.
Byler v. Monholland, 2 Sandf., 478.
Daniel v. Joiner et al., 3 Iredell's Eq., 520.

The word "lien" is a generic term; defined, "A hold or claim which one person has on the property of another as a security for some debt or charge."

Can it be said, in view of this definition, that the outstanding bonds of the State of Tennessee, issued to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company under and in pursuance of the act of February 11, 1852, do not constitute liens on the railroad and property of the company in accordance with this definition?

They are liens by the highest order of contract: a grant of the State of Tennessee, by an act of its Legislature.

II.

THE BONDS ISSUED IN AID OF RAILROAD COMPANIES IN AND BY THE STATE OF TENNESSEE, UNDER AND IN PURSUANCE OF THE ACT OF THE LEGISLATURE OF THAT STATE, PASSED FEBRUARY 11, 1852, ENTITLED "AN ACT TO ESTABLISH A SYSTEM OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN THIS STATE," WHEN ISSUED BY THE STATE AND RECEIVED AND SOLD BY THE COMPANIES, WERE CONTRACTS, AND AS SUCH CONSTITUTE EXPRESS LIENS, IN THE NATURE OF A MORTGAGE, ON THE RAILROAD AND OTHER PROPERTY OF THE COMPANIES, THAT COULD NOT BE AFFECTED BY ANY SUBSEQUENT ACT OF THE LEGISLATURE, WITHOUT THE CONSENT OR ASSENT OF THE HOLDERS OF SUCH BONDS.

Before discussing the proposition, it may be well to dispose of an objection that will possibly be suggested with reference to the right of parties to appeal to this court, in view of the fact that the act has given a specific remedy in the courts of the State. This court, and others of high authority, having so often passed on the question, we deem it unnecessary to comment thereon, except to cite some few cases, wherein the subject has been fully determined:

Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall., 425.
McNutt v. Bland, 2 Howard, U. S., 10.

In view of the statute authorizing the issue of these bonds, and under which they were issued, and that, when issued, they constituted, and still constitute, first, paramount, and prior liens on the railroad and property of the company; which liens the railroad company undertook, agreed, and obligated itself to pay, with interest, at maturity, and the further fact that the question presented by the proposition has so often been passed upon by this court, surely it is not necessary to offer any elaborate discussion or cite authorities to elucidate it.

When an act of the Legislature of a State is in its nature a contract, and authorizes or grants privileges or powers to a private corporation, and, in pursuance of such act, rights have vested bona fide in third parties, it is not in the power of the State, by a subsequent act, to annul, repeal, or change the act so as to impair or destroy such vested rights.

Von Hoffman v. The City of Quincy, 4 Wall., 535.
Butz v. Muscatine, 8 Wall., 575.
Lee County v. Rogers, 7 Wall., 175.
Furman v. Nichol, 8 Wall., 44.
Woodruff v. Trapnall, 10 How., 208.
Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How., 316.
Lansing v. County Treasurer, 1 Dillon, Cr. C. R., 522.

Muscatine v. Railroad Company, 1 Dillon, 536.
State v. Milwaukee, 25 Wis., 122.
Brooklyn Park Company v. Armstrong, 45 N. Y., 234.
Western Savings Fund Society v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. St., 175.
Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall., 175.

Having shown that the statute of February 11, 1852, authorizing the issuance of these bonds, made and constituted the bonds liens on the railroad and property of the company, in the nature of contracts between the State, the railroad company and the owners of the bonds falling directly within the constitutional prohibition, that "no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts," we will conclude by a citation from a great MASTER, on the doctrine of order, which is the correct definition of the word "law":

> "One of the tests that a contract has been impaired is that its value has, by legislation, been diminished. It is not, by the Constitution, to be impaired at all. This is not a question of degree or manner or cause, but of encroaching in any respect on its obligation, dispensing with any part of its force."

Planters' Bank v. Sharp, 6 How., 327.
Von Hoffman v. City of Quincy, 4 Wall., 553.

JNO. J. MacKINNON,
LEOPOLD WALLACK,
Counsel for C. C. Randall.

Supreme Court of the United States.

Appeal from Circuit Court of the United States.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.

versus

MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL,
PETER HAMILTON,
Solicitors for DUNCAN & ELLIOTT, Trustees.

Supreme Court of the United States.

ON APPEAL FROM

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

MORRIS KETCHUM

versus

MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET. AL.

The pleas and answers of the defendants propound, as a bar to the claim of the plaintiff to maintain any suit as a trustee under the deed of trust executed by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, at Mobile, the first day of November, 1853, the final order and decree of the Court of Chancery, of the State of Alabama, held in that City in April, 1863, rendered in a suit of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company against said Ketchum, which, upon the matters contained in the bill, removed the said Morris Ketchum from the trusteeship designated in that deed, and substituted for him, and his associates in it (who had died), other persons, and clothed them with all the rights, powers and privileges named in the said deed, and charge them vith all the duties by the said deed imposed to the same ex- nt, as though they had been the original appointees; that s decree has been executed, has never been impaired nor ted, and that the plaintiff, with notice of the same, has iesced therein, submitted to its mandate, and has never performed a duty as trustee from the date thereof until the filing of the bill, nor offered to do so.

The decree is appended to the bill. The court takes cognizance of the constitution and laws of Alabama, the organization of her judiciary, and the jurisdiction of her tribunals. The court knows that the Court of Chancery, prior to the date of this deed of trust, and at the time of this decree, had jurisdiction of suits against non-residents wherein the object of the suit, concerns an estate, lien, or charge upon lands, or the disposition of lands, or interest in, title to, or incumbrance on personal property within the State, or where the cause of action arose, or the act on which it was predicated, was to have been performed in the State. It had jurisdiction under statutes, of the appointment and removal of trustees, whether under deeds or wills.

Ala. Code, 1852, Sections 2872, 2999, 3000.

The description of the chancery jurisdiction in respect to non-residents is precise, and the powers granted to the Court of Chancery did not exceed the limit of the judicial power of the State. The case before the Court of Chancery, in 1863, concerned a deed of trust executed by a railroad corporation chartered by the State, and having its political and commercial domicil in the State where the deed was executed. The franchises, faculties, powers of the corporation, as well as its real and personal estates are conveyed in the deed under an authority derived from its charter. The duties which the trustees had to perform presently, as well as contingently, brought them into immediate contact with the corporation, with its rights and estates within the State. The code authorized the Court of Chancery to remove a trustee for violation or threatened violations of the trust, for insolvency or impending insolvency, for removal from the State, or other cause rendering him unsuitable.

This Code prescribed a method of procedure for subjectin the non-resident to accountability within its jurisdiction.
provided for the publication of the fact, that the cause exis and that the defendant was a party and was required to at This was to be posted on the door of the court, and adve in a paper to be designated by the court. The decree of the court if rendered on a default, remained provisional for eighteen months, subject to be opened on an application. Besides there were periods for appeal, and for filing bills of review.

Ala. Code, Sections 2945, 2946.

When Morris Ketchum accepted the office of trustee under a deed which exacts continuous intercourse and co-operation with the corporation in the performance of responsible acts, and which empowered him with his associates upon certain contingencies, which have happened, to take possession and control of its franchises and faculties, as a corporation, and the fulfilment of its public duties and obligations within the State of Alabama, and for the State; of the management of the administration, the collection of tolls, freights, rents, incomes, for the benefit of the beneficiaries of the trust, he must have known that by the terms of his contract, he was submitted the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery of the State, whether resident or non-resident, friend or enemy, in all the matters which concerned the administration of the property, the performance of duties, or the tenure of the office.

This court had a jurisdiction over him, more extensive than that of any other Court of Chancery. No court in New York, the place of his domicil, could remove him from the trust for insolvency, unsuitableness, removal from the State, or for breaches of trust. Such a court might call him to account for trust property, as for breaches of duty in the administration, but none could simply arraign, convict and dismiss him, but the Court of Alabama. This peculiar and particular jurisdiction is that which the Court of Chancery in Mobile exercised in the year 1863. The only enquiry competent to any other tribunal to make, is, did the Code of the State of Alabama vest this jurisdiction in the court. Was the mode of notifying the defendant—if notice were necessary—authorized. These being ascertained, and the decree of the court determines a right arising on a deed made under the authority of the laws of the State, and primarily affecting persons and things under its risdiction. The common equity of civilized nations compels em to lend their aid to maintain the right so judicially ascertained. This plaintiff, the subject of the decree, cannot object to the jurisdiction, for it was implied when he accepted the deed that he was to account to the court, according to the law of the court. Nor would any tribunal of any State or country, hesitate to recognize, internationally, the rights which had been so declared by the courts of Alabama. The intrinsic lawfulness and rightfulness of a jurisdiction so vested and declared, gives to the decrees an irresistible claim to respect and sanction. Nor is there anything like exorbitance or novelty in the nature or degree of the jurisdiction, to excite alarm, awaken surprise or arouse to opposition. The Supreme Court of the United States have repeatedly referred to the jurisdiction of Courts of Chancery, to remove trustees for any suitable cases as belonging to it.

Suydam vs. Williamson, 6 Wall, 723.

The Court of Chancery has, independent of any statutory authority, power to displace a trustee for sufficient cause, and to substitute another in his stead. It was objected that he could only be displaced by a bill, and that the court could not do it on a petition. But a departure from the usual practice of the court in doing an act which the court has authority to do, does not render the act void. It may be irregular or erroneous, and may be set aside or reversed by a direct proceeding, but its validity cannot be impeached in a collateral action.

People vs. Norton, 9 N. Y. R., 176.

Courts of Chancery have removed trustees for a violation of their duty as such: for a negligent management of trust property; because they have become incapable of action; or when the trustees are so incompatible that they cannot act together as such.

2 Story Eq., 1287, 8, 9.
Billings vs. Billings, 110 Mass., 225.
10 Allen, 124; Perry on Trusts, Sec. 276.

The cases are abundant to show that a removal from t

State, or being out of the jurisdiction of the court, or becoming an alien enemy, is sufficient.

Collum vs. Bank of Alabama, 23 Ala. Rep., 797.
2 Young and Coll., 529; 37 Maryland Rep., 25; 8 Hare, 101.
60 Barb., 9; 7 L. Rep. Ch., 224; 3 Bro Ch., 191.

The jurisdiction is assumed for the protection and the preservation of the trust estate, the appointment and removal of trustees, and whenever a sufficient cause arises the Chancellor exercises a sound discretion.

The commission granted to the Chancellor in Alabama is, to ascertain whether the trustee is suitable for the position in which he has been placed.

This judgment of his cannot be revised by any other tribunal, unless perpaps upon an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State. There can be no impeachment collaterally.

Perry on Trusts, Sec. 276.

The bill filed by the Mobile & Ohio R. Co., contains a lucid statement of the untrustworthy character of this plaintiff. He seemed to have no other purpose than to force the corporation into providing him with a sinecure charging the money of the corporation. He was greedy, extortionate, unfaithful. The bill makes a recital of fact and instance of derelictions, shortcomings and mala fides, which justify their indisposition to have any connection with him.

The bill charges him with violations of his trust; converting property to his own use; failure to perform duty; and the fact that he resided beyond the State, and that the extraordinary circumstances of the existing war disabled him from performing the duties imposed upon him by the deed. The Code of the State, made prior to the date of the deed, contained the rules of procedure which experience had dictated in the matter of non-resident defendants. There was a publication of the fact an existing suit for a length of time, sufficient to warrant a clusion that it may come to the knowledge of the party. warrants the preliminary proceedings in the cause. The e remains provisional for a term of eighteen months after, and on application a re-hearing can be obtained. A bill of review is allowable at any time for three years, In this procedure the decree pro confesso is—as it is under the rules of the Supreme Court of United States in equity—a confession of the statement of facts contained in the bill.

The bill in the Court of Chancery, at Mobile, was filed in January, 1862; the decree was rendered in April, 1863. It seems then that Morris Ketchum had under the existing laws a power to apply by bill of review, after he had been notified of the decree, and after the war had terminated and intercourse resumed among the States.

The United States during this period passed an act for the confiscation of the property of certain persons charged with rebellion. The mode of procedure was that of a seizure of the property, and the publication for fourteen days of the fact and admonishing parties interested to appear and show cause. In a very large proportion, if not all of the suits, the parties interested were entirely unable to appear, and were in fact ignorant of the proceeding. The cases after the war were scrutinized, and in some, writs of error were taken. The mode of procedure was canvassed and criticised. It was successfully argued in the case of Miller vs. United States, 11 Wall. 268: 'That the notice to Miller being constructive, did not and could not change the legal regularity of the proceedings. Constructive notice, according to the lawful practice of the Court, is to all intents and purposes, just as effectual as actual notice. It is not good or bad, as there may or may not be reason to believe that it covered actual notice to the claimant. The only redress is, either by some application to the Court or by appeal or writ of error."

The Supreme Court adopted that argument and applied it in all the cases which were afterwards brought before it. If the notice by publication were regularly given according to the order of the Court, it was sufficient. Strictness was required as to this.

Mc Veigh vs. Earle, 1 Otto, 503.

The Supreme Court applies the same principle in dea with the judgments or decrees of the State Courts, four upon process of a similar description.

If the publication or other form of constructive notice be regular, they accord to judgments recognition and support; as lawful and binding. The only enquiry has been whether the publication came fairly within the purview of the State law, and had been accurately and properly made and proved. This being ascertained, the judgment was declared to be operative.

Hollingsworth vs. Barbour, 4 Pet. 475.
Nations vs. Johnson, 24 How. 195.
Earle vs. McVeigh, 1 Otto, 503, 506.
Galpin vs. Page, 18 Wall, 350.

These orders of publication usually have been made in cases where some estate, lien or charge, or disposition of land is involved in the suit, or some contract made in the State, or act to be performed in the State, gave rise to the proceedings.

Boswell vs. Otis, 9 How. 350.
Hunt vs. Wickliff, 2 Pet. 214.
Jackson vs. Turman, 10 Yerg. 172.
Fletcher vs. Ferrill, 9 Dana, 372.

The States of the United States have the same power to regulate the modes of proceeding in their courts as the United States have to regulate proceedings in their own courts. The judgments of the courts of a State are to be treated as null and void for no other reason than the judgments of courts of the United States are to be treated as null and void in the State courts.

Suppose a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States were in question, a decree founded upon an order of publication of that court in a cause wherein the object of the suit was to enforce some "legal or equitable lien upon, or claim to, or to remove the cloud from real or personal property" within the district, according to the act of Congress of 1875; the defendant is in a foreign State, at war with the United States; the court passes the order, hears the cause, allows eighteen nonths for the defendant to show cause against the decree, nd then enlarges the time till it exceeds six years from the te of the decree.

Suppose a suit afterwards to be brought in a State court and this decree to be impeached as a nullity, for that the party could not have appeared and defended the cause, and that the court cannot take jurisdiction of a party under such a condition of facts.

The answer to this whole argument would be what was answered in the case of Miller, as I have quoted from the argument. The power belongs to every Legislature to determine the method of proceeding in their courts, and the courts within the same jurisdiction must respect and acknowledge the judgments so rendered as valid for considerations of public order, and the domestic tranquillity and safety of property and respect for laws.

It is the power of the law which determines the validity of the procedure and the sufficiency of the notice to bind the party. The case we have suggested as likely to arise under the law of the United States, demonstrates the weakness of the objection to the decree we have pleaded. The act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1875, is analogous to the articles we have cited from the Code of Alabama. Constructive service has been employed by the United States in the same class of cases, from necessity. The judgments to be given under that statute will derive their efficacy at home and abroad from this statute law. The courts of other States and countries will say wherever civil government exists, men both by right and fact make their contracts and determine their relations with reference to the positive law of the place where the contract is made and to be performed, and with a distinct understanding of the rights of the parties under the contract, and how those may be modified, changed or destroyed by these laws, including the capacity and state of the parties themselves. This deed of trust was made in Alabama. The corporate powers, franchises and duties as a public carrier, with the corporate property, under a law of the State were conveyed in trust; the trustee, under some circumstances, might under the deed become an owner for other persons. He was at once to co-operate with the corporation in disposing of property. The la reserved to the courts the power to remove him on the app cation of a party interested. The duties correlative to rights conveyed, were determined by the law of the State, the remedies in case the duties were not performed, or the trustee became incapable or untrustworthy, were already prepared and in the repository of the Court of Chancery. When a state of facts arose which disabled the trustee, living beyond the jurisdiction and power of the Court of Chancery to enforce the trust, his displacement became an appropriate function of the court upon a demand made by a party in interest.

The English Court of Chancery had this power before the passage of the trustee acts in 1850.

Under those acts summary methods are provided to remove trustees who go abroad.

In re Joyce's estate, 2 Eq. Cases, 576, a new trustee was appointed in the place of a bankrupt who had not been heard of for some years.

In re Renshaw, 4 Ch. Ap. 783, 167, notice to the trustee was dispensed with.

10 Ch. App. 272, 273, 4 De. Mc. & G. 839.

Non-residence a sufficient cause for removal.

Cullom vs. Bank of Alabama, 23 Alabama, 797.
Maxwell vs. Fennie, 7 Caldwell, 434.

In Dorsey vs. Thompson, 37 Maryland R. 25: The case was that of a trustee who had left the State at the beginning of the war and remained two or three years. He was removed after an order of publication, as an enemy and one not likely to return to the State in any definite period.

The Court of Appeals of Maryland sustained the decree for the removal of the trustee as an unsuitable person under the circumstances, and referred to a series of cases in that State in which appointments had been made because of absence, without notice to the trustee.

2 Bland. Ch. R. 221, 398; 10 G. & J. 183.

The statute of Alabama is very nearly the same as that of Maryland, but larger power is given to the court and to the Register of the Court. The Supreme Court held that an appointment made by a Register could not be collaterally impeached.

Gaines vs. Harvin, 19 Ala. 491.

Neither Code regards the trustee as a permanent owner of the property, or as inseparable from the trust.

He is a mandatary with specific duties, which terminated the property passes from him to the beneficiaries by operation of the law. The authors of the trust and the beneficiaries are particular objects of the protecting jurisdiction of the court. It is for them that he holds or administers the estate. He is not allowed to make a profit from it at their expense, nor to place his interest in opposition to theirs; nor can he look cunningly for advantages or emoluments for himself. In a case where the trustee had pertinaciously held on to the trusteeship to the discomfort of the co-trustees and damage to the estate, the Chancellor said: He liked not that a man should be ambitious of a trust when he could get nothing by it, and for no other reason he was removed.

Lewin on Trusts, 712.

Whenever a trustee becomes unsuitable for the trust he can be removed. Whenever the interests of the estate requires, a Court of Chancery may remove him. But on the principle laid down, a case where the disability is absolute and inexorable, the case where .the trustee cannot have intercourse with the author of the trust, or the property of the trust, and is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, the trustee cannot be removed at all. The power of the court is paralyzed. When the legislation allowed of trustees and trust estates, they come under legislative control. Before this trust estate or trustee existed, the law was made to suit the case. The court existed and the formulary existed to afford a remedy in that case.

All States prescribe modes of proceeding for their courts and declare the effect and operation of their judgments and decrees. The general rule is that the judgment and decree of a court in a cause submitted to its jurisdiction is conclusive between the parties and privies. The order and repose of society, and the security of property and persons demand that such judgments be respected as guarantees of order and repose. How can a court of Alabama repudiate the decree of a court invested with jurisdiction by the constitution and laws of the State to dispose of the subject matter of the suit, and which court has faithfully pursued the mode of proceeding prescribed to it, and has accurately and considerately applied the law to the precise case?

The pleas and answers which bring this decree to the notice of the court, and discover to the court that its obligation and effect has not been diminished or disturbed, are without a more conclusive answer to the bill, and so the Hon. the Judge of the Circuit Court has decided.

II.

We propose to consider the operation and effect of the ordinances and statutes of the State of Alabama, which, after hostilities had terminated, confirmed and ratified under certain conditions the judgments and decrees that had been rendered by the courts of the State during the war.

The policy and propriety of the legislation is not to be gainsaid. There had been discord, confusion, disturbance and quarrel for some years. These ordinances were composing, benignant and just, and were suited to the conditions which called them into life. The State had been placed in an abnormal condition in respect to the Constitution of the United States and the Union; it devolved on the people of the State in placing the State in its normal condition with respect to these, forthwith to define the legal operation and effect of the legislative and judicial proceedings which had been conducted and matured into acts during that period. The powers of municipal sovereignty and jurisdiction possessed by the people, were delegated to the conventions by them with the consent of the United States.

The only enactments in respect to the judgments and decrees rendered by the State courts during this period are those adopted by the State conventions and State Legislatures.

Congress made no provision on the subject, probably satisfied with the action of the States themselves. Congress did provide that the State laws of limitation or prescription should not be employed to defeat the claims of creditors who had not access to the courts, and no other statute seems to have been framed to obviate difficulty or controversy.

Ross vs. Jones, 22 Wall., 576.

It was competent for Congress to have passed a law to authorize parties to remove the suits from the State courts which had gone to judgment during the war by a default, or to have provided for another trial. This act was passed in a number of the State Conventions which were called after the war.

The cases which have come before the Supreme Court of the United States since the war were decided on these special circumstances.

Dean vs. Wilson, 10 Wall, 172.
McQuiddy vs. Ware, 20 Wall, 14.
Ludlow vs. Ramsey, 11 Wall, 582.
Lasere vs. Rochereau, 17 Wall., 437.

The principle deducible from these decisions has a limited operation and explains but a few cases.

In two of them it appeared that a person had been violently expelled by the authorities of the United States from their homes and prohibited to return, and while under this duress the local tribunals had made seizures and sales of their property as absentees from the jurisdiction. The court regarded the suits as invalid. In other cases there was an attempt to be relieved from the operation of judgments against the plaintiff as absentees.

The absence was a voluntary abandonment of the jurisdiction, without coercion. The relief was not granted in these cases.

The Supreme Court have not decided that the laws under which the proceedings in the Court of Chancery at Mobile, against Ketchum were suspended in their operation, or that the judgments and decrees so rendered were inoperative. Congress has left them without denunciation of any kind. It has not provided for a removal of the suits which had passed into judgments to the Courts of the United States, or for any revision there. Probably, the ordinances which were adopted by the State Conventions relative to the confirmation and ratification of the judgments and decrees, with a provision for re-hearings and new trials, were suggested to them as necessary and proper to meet the exigencies of the case, and prevented federal legislation. Those adopted in Alabama, and the legislation which followed extending the term were comprehensive and liberal acts of statesmanship. Society required after such commotions that the empire of justice and right should be restored, and that moderation and fair dealing should prevail, even to the defeat of expectations or acquisitions obtained in this period. Usually a judgment terminates litigation, and to grant a new trial after the judgment is an act of interference. The legislation is retroactive. But when the laws guarantee security, inspire confidence promote quiet, the retroaction is not a ground of reproach. Such acts are essential at such times to promote peace and restore order. They violate the obligation of no contract, impair no right of property, invade no principle of natural justice. They provide simply that where society has been in conditions of disorder, so that the regular and tranquil administration of justice has not existed, that persons injured thereby shall not be concluded by the judgment or decree. Ketchum had no cause of complaint against these acts. The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company could not properly have complained. The precedents fully establish the lawfulness and the wisdom of such enactments.

The American history furnishes a striking instance. Sequestration laws, and laws requiring debts due to British creditors, were passed in the States, and large payments were made by the debtors to the State Governments during the war of the revolution. The treaty of peace of 1783, at the end of the war, provided that no impediment should be interposed to the collection of debts due to the creditors of either nation. The Constitution in 1787, provided that treaties made by the United States should be the supreme law of the land. So that the payments to the States under State laws were invalidated.

Ware vs. Hylton, 3 Dall., 199.

An executor in New Hampshire procured an order of court for the sale of the lands of the succession for the payment of the debts of the succession. The executor sold lands in Rhode Island, to which State his authority did not extend. The Legislature of Rhode Island ratified and confirmed the sale, and thus validated the deed.

2 Peter, 627.
10 Peters, 291.
114 Mass., 181.

Sales made by certain married women in Pennsylvania were void, because they were not in conformity to the law. The Legislature of Pennsylvania, without any consent of the grantors, passed laws curing the defects in the deed. The laws were sustained as constitutional.

2 Peters, 380.
8 Peters, 88.

For a number of years there had been an erroneous celebration of the rite of marriage in the State of Connecticut. The Legislature passed acts for confirming the marriages. The acts were valid.

4 Conn., 226.
7 Conn., 319, 371.
6 Conn., 88.

The Statutes of the State of New York requiring the recordation of certain land titles in a military district, and the annulment of those not recorded, was held to be constitutional.

3 Peters, 280.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in Calder vs. Bull, 3 Dall., 391, says: "It is a good general rule that a law should not have a retrospect. But there are cases in which laws may justly, and for the benefit of the community, and also of individuals, relate to a time antecedent to their commencement." And again, the court say: "It has been repeatedly decided in this court that the retrospective operation of such a law forms no objection to it. Almost every law providing a new remedy affects and operates upon causes of action existing at the time the law is passed."

7 Peters, 222.

The Statutes which confirm judgments of courts, and afford opportunity to the losing party to have a new trial, are supported upon the principal of these cases.

In Phillips vs. Eyre the question arose upon an act of the Colonial Legislature of Jamaica, which indemnified an officer who, during a civil commotion in the island, had proclaimed martial law, and had arrested and imprisoned the plaintiff in this suit. The question was whether the act was valid as a defence against the action. The Court of Exchequer Chamber, on writ of error, sustained the validity of the statute. The court quote the case of Calder vs. Bull, in the Supreme Court of the United States (3 Dall, 391): "The result of which is that a State law may be retrospective in its character, and may divest vested rights, and yet not violate the Constitution of the United States." And the court says: "The authority of the Supreme Court of the United States, so much relied on as illustrating the general principles of law upon which the decision of the question depends, turns out to be favorable to the validity of the colonial act." The court then say: "In fine, allowing the general inexpediency of retrospective legislation, it cannot be pronounced naturally or necessarily unjust. There may be occasions or circumstances involving the safety of the State, or even the conduct of individual subjects, the justice of which prospective laws, made for ordinary occasions and the usual exigencies of society, for want of provision, fail to meet, and in which the execution of the law as it stood at the time, may involve practical public inconvenience and wrong. Summa jus summa injuria."

L. R. 6 Q. B., p. 1.

The argument made was that a subject could not be deprived of his right of action for a wrong done, by a retrospective statute. The Congress of the United States, by an act of 2d March, 1867, Ch. 155, passed an act prohibiting actions for acts done during the war, under color of authority, as comprehensive as that of Jamaica. The acts of the Conventions of Georgia, Louisiana and Alabama are of the same import. They confirmed the judgments and decrees of the tribunals and subjected the plaintiffs to a condition that they should be opened for parties to make a defence, on application. It is not for a party to complain of oppression, tyranny or injustice, where such an overture was thrice offered, and when it was kept open for near four years for his acceptance, and at each offer refused—when others performed duties and incurred responsibilities on the faith of the decree of the court—when acquiescence in the decree has been universal, and no one complains but a senile old man in the custody of an attorney. The validity of these acts has been confirmed by judicial decisions of the State of Alabama—have been affirmed in a series of legislative enactments. The people of the State have acted upon them in the daily walks of life. They were statutes of repose, to maintain social order and promote domestic tranquility, and work injustice to no one.

The record and proceedings in the Court of Chancery at Mobile, disclose a cause within the ordinary jurisdiction of the State, and a course of proceeding adapted to the case, and sanctioned by the regular course of procedure which had long existed in the State. The Code does not make any exception in its articles, in reference to their incapacity or inability to appear. The cases to which the jurisdiction extends arises either out of the fact that the contract had been made and was to be performed in the State, or that property and rights under the jurisdiction of the State was to be affected by the suit. But, it is said that the jurisdiction of the court cannot extend to an alien enemy, and that no suit can include him as a party. But the statement of law, or fact, is destitute of any legal foundation. An alien enemy can be sued and can defend a suit. The decisions of the Supreme Court are decisive of the point.

McVeigh vs. United States, 11 Wall., 257.
University vs. Finch, 18 Wall., 106.
United States vs. Miller, 11 Wall., 268.

No writer upon practice or pleading has furnished any precedent of a plea of a defendant, that he was an alien enemy, and in general, both at law and in equity, pleas by a party of his own disability are not allowed.

Arch. Civil Ple., 303.
1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 156.

It sometimes happens that a foreign court will not enforce a judgment when the defendant did not reside in the State and was not subject to its process, and had no notice of the pendency of the proceedings. In such cases the courts say, that the judgments cannot operate extra territoriam. But that class of cases is limited to personal judgments, and in this class is limited to the cases where the defendant had no connection with the State or its laws and was in no manner bound to obey the mandates of its courts, or to submit to their jurisdiction. But the principle has no application to the courts of the States themselves, and when the defendant had rendered himself amenable to the laws and the jurisdiction of the courts. Morris Ketchum was a trustee, appointed in Alabama, by one of its corporations.

His contract bound him to the performance of duties and the care of property in the State. Though not a disqualification for the position of trustee, that he was a non-resident, it was a serious objection, and with other circumstances, a cause for removal. Non-residence placed him out of the reach of the jurisdiction of the court for purposes connected with the performance of his duties. If that non-residence became permanent and obstructive, nothing more was required. A decree for removal from office of a trustee, would not be denied or obstructed in any other court. Story, in his Conflict of Laws, says: "That foreign jurists strongly contend that the decree of a foreign court declaring the state of a person, and placing him as an idiot or minor, or prodigal, ought to be deemed of universal authority and obligation." Judge Story agrees to this and says: "And so it ought and doubtless would be deemed in regard to all acts done and authority exercised within the jurisdiction which appointed him."

Conflict of Laws, 787.

But the remarkable case here, is that of a court in the same jurisdiction, being called upon to denounce as null and void, the sentence of a court which has the sole and exclusive jurisdiction to remove a trustee appointed in the State, and whose duties were all to be performed in the State.

The extravagance of the demand is increased by the fact, that the sentences are in accordance with the laws which have never been called in question, and by a procedure which is correspondent to that used in all of the States, and in a large class of the cases in the courts of the United States. The plaintiff who brings this suit, brings before the court persons by publication. The people of the State in convention have affirmed the authority which made the decrees, and have afforded to the party complaining, a time, place, and mode of redress for any defect in the process or procedure. There has been a full execution of the decree before it was ever called in question, and an entire acquiescence in its conditions for the full period of prescription under the law of the State. If this had been a foreign judgment, such a consequence could not have followed as is here claimed. Justice Story says, where a foreign judgment is pleaded as a bar to proceedings, the court in which it is pleaded accepts it as valid:

"For if it has been pronounced by a competent tribunal, and carried into effect, the losing party has no right to institute a new suit elsewhere, and thus to bring the matter again into controversy; and the other party is not to lose the protection which the foreign judgment gave him. It is then, res judicata, which ought to be received as conclusive of right; and the exceptio rei judicatæ, under such circumstances is entitled to universal conclusiveness and respect. The distinction has been frequently recognized as having a just foundation in international justice.

Story Confl., Sec. 598.

It is stated in an English case that there is only one case in which the sentence or judgment of a foreign State is examinable in our courts, and that is when the party who claims the benefit of it, applies to our courts to enforce it. * * * In all other cases we give entire faith and credit to the sentences of foreign courts, and consider them as conclusive upon us.

Phillips vs. Hunter, 2 H. B. 410.

The jurisdiction of the Circuit Courts of the United States, is a concurrent jurisdiction with that of the Courts of Law and Chancery of the States. There is no capacity in the former to entertain bills of review, motions for rehearing, or new trials, or appeals, or writs of error, in respect to the judgments or decrees of the latter. In a few cases, they have a common superior—the Supreme Court of the United States; but generally they are distinct and co-ordinate jurisdictions. Each is entitled to respect and consideration for the other.

In a long list of cases the Supreme Court of the United States has laid down rules for preventing conflicts of authority among them, and for preserving to each their due weight in the judicial administration of the State.

Taylor vs. Carryl, 20 H., 584.
Jeter vs. Hewitt, 22 H. 352.

In another class of cases the Supreme Court of the United States have shown that it could recede from an untenable position and gracefully yield to the Supreme Court of a State its just pre-eminence in dealing with a class of cases to which the case under consideration belongs. In Snyder vs. Williamson, 24 H. 427—the Supreme Court considered a case in which it appeared that the trustee appointed in New York had administered and had sold portions of the trust estate by authority of the Chancellor in New York. The beneficiaries of the trust were minors who when they became of age sued to recover the property sold, because the Chancellor's orders were null and void, as not conforming to the authority of the statute. A number of suits were heard and decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and are reported in 8 How. 495, 565, 566, and were elaborately examined, and the judgments of the court were adverse to the validity of the orders of the Chancellor of the State of New York. Other suits involving the same questions were instituted in the courts of the State of New York, and the judgment of the tribunals of that State sanctioned the acts of the Chancellor as valid. In the case before the Supreme Court of the United States above cited, the question arose which court was the final arbiter of the question, and the court determined that the question belonged to the supreme cognizance of the courts of New York.

The language of the court in that opinion was:

* * * * * * *

"The subject of the dispute is real property situated within the State of New York, and her laws exclusively govern in respect to the rights of the parties, the modes of the transfer, and the solemnities which should accompany them. Communi et recta sententia est in rebus immobilibus servandum esse jus loci in quo bona sunt sita. Every sovereign has the exclusive right to command within his own territory; and the laws which originate rights to real property are commands addressed to the members of the State, requiring them to abstain from any interference with the proprietary right they recognize or establish; and in respect to this subject the sovereignty of New York has not been impaired by her adoption of the sovereignty of the Federal Constitution.

"The power to establish federal courts, and to endow them with a jurisdiction to determine controversies between certain parties, affords no pretext for abrogating any established law of property, or for removing any obligation of her citizens to submit to the rule of the local sovereign. The title of the devisees of Mary Clarke was divested of authority conferred by the legislature of the State, which was exercised subject to the oversight of her own tribunals. The persons affected by this authority were natives of the State—children under the superintending care of the parental jurisdiction of the State. It was in the constitutional exercise of this supreme and exclusive jurisdiction that this title was disturbed. It behooves every other State to enforce or maintain rights which have thus originated in laws operating within their legitimate sphere, and which defeat no policy of their own; and the jurisprudence of this court attests the care with which this court has observed the general obligation (of which this is a particular instance), in its administration throughout the Union."

24 How. U. S., 433.

The case before this court, is that of a trustee appointed to a trust, by a corporation of this State. He was a non-resident at the time of his appointment, and at the time of his removal. When application for his removal was made, he was in the jurisdiction of the State of New York, and unable to reach Alabama for any peaceful purpose. He was charged with the violation of his duties; with non-residence and incapacity to do his duty, and as a man unsuitable. Orderly proceedings were had in the cause, and a final judgment rendered against him in April, 1863. He made no appeal, nor did he take any steps to annul the decree. His successor was appointed, and has performed the duties, without a challenge from any one, till March, 1876, when this suit was brought by the plaintiff in the Circuit Court of the United States.

The conventions of the people of the State, and the legislature of the State, and this judicial tribunal of this State, have uniformly maintained the authority of the State courts to render such judgments. At one time there was some variety of opinion among judges, but the firm and settled opinion of the State, of the legal profession and of the Supreme Court is settled, never again to be agitated anew.

The conclusion therefore is, that the decree is valid in operation, and not to be called in question collaterally.

The period in which it could be directly attached expired in 1869.

III.

The inviolability of the decree made in the Court of Chancery at Mobile in April, 1863, against the plaintiff in the courts of the State of Alabama, having been established, the question arises, whether the Government of the United States, or the courts of the United States are under any obligation, or have any prerogative or other jurisdiction, to declare this judgment to be null and void.

There is no act of Congress that prohibited the sitting of State Courts during the civil war, nor any for the nullification of any class of their judgments. On the contrary, a general recognition of those judgments has been made in tribunals of the States and of the Union. They have been affirmed or reversed in the Supreme Court of the United States, on writs of error. Nor is there anything in the subject of this decree to entitle it to the peculiar disfavor of the United States.

There is not among the Statutes of the United States, one which relates to the appointment or the removal of trustees under a deed or will in any one of the States of this Union.

All that relates to their appointment, accountability and removal, must be ascertained from the municipal laws of the several and respective States of the Union. The State of Louisiana only recognizes them as a class of mandataries, and as subject to that law only.

The Statutes of Alabama have reduced their proportions. Their appointment cannot descend. They cannot remove from the State, they can be discarded for insolvency, and displaced when unsuitable. The law which authorized the appointment of Ketchum is an Alabama law, and the source of his responsibility and the tenure of his appointment are to be found in the Code of this State. The Court of Chancery of the United States would hold him to account on the principles of her jurisprudence. If the removal of Ketchum by a Court of Alabama, had been made in the most arbitrary manner, and for the most frivolous and fantastical reasons, there could not be any redress from the Supreme Court of the United States by any writ of error to this court. That court would never have granted a writ of error upon application. If the Supreme Court had had jurisdiction, Ketchum might have sued out such a writ at any time for three years after hostilities had ceased. The judgment became final in November, 1864, and until November, 1869, a writ of error would have been exigible. But the case shows a decree without a flaw on the face of it, made upon a cause wholly municipal and administrative in its character, conservatory and considerate in its purpose, which the sovereign and legislative authorities of the State have confirmed and ratified on constitutional principles, which the tribunals recognize to be valid; against which no review has been claimed, no appeal sought, and which has remained executed for a period of thirteen years without question.

The defendants ask this decree to be treated as a nullity upon some ground of public policy.

The Circuit Court of the United States is not a court of review. It has no superintending or controlling jurisdiction over the Courts of Alabama. The Courts of Chancery in Alabama have a jurisdiction as large in all respects as the Courts of the United States in matters of Chancery jurisdiction, and it is only in a few cases that the Supreme Court of the United States can revise their decrees on writ of error. It is not affirmed that this decree could have been resisted in this Court of Chancery. No affidavit has been submitted there, that there was or is a meritorious defence. All the rules that regulate the relations between the Courts of the United States and State Courts would be subverted were this court to entertain the jurisdiction which is implied in the prayer of this bill. The precise form of the objection is, that Morris Ketchum, a citizen of the State of New York, was made a party to a suit in the State of Alabama, by a publication during a time of war, at a time when he could not fairly be expected to appear to suit. But the answer is, that the suit concerned property, duty and rights which had their origin in Alabama, were subject to her laws, and that Ketchum became connected with them by a deed executed in that State and accepted by him. The lex loci as well as the lex fori had not been changed. He had become incapacitated from performing obligations and duties the law imposed, and the court appointed, as it was authorized, his substitute.

Such a decree is entitled to credit everywhere,

The admininistration of laws through regular tribunals is not a merely municipal concern, but is of universal interest and necessity, without which no civilization can exist ; and the division of mankind into nations and States for political, administrative or physical causes, is subordinate to the general interest of universal civil society. The jurisdiction of all countries has, therefore, continually tended to discountenance the principle that they should obstruct and thwart one another, but on the contrary, that jurisdiction should be exerted to promote and to assist each other.

The nature of judicial functions implies that every suit and prosecution should have a solution, and that solution should be executed even against the will of the unsuccessful party. Whether the judgment be right or wrong, it declares and defines the rights of the parties conclusively.

It is not only final and conclusive in the particular suit, but is conclusive between them in every other suit and in every other court. It is only in the great exigencies of society that legislatures interfere with the sanctity or authority of the res judicata. The Congress of the United States did not deem it necessary to make any nullifying statutes in respect to the legislative administration of the States during the war, as it affected persons, save only in respect to the State debts. It made no statute at all in respect to the judgments and decrees of the State courts. At the termination of hostilities, the political authorities of the United States submitted to the people of those insurgent States themselves, the power and duty of restoring civil and social order and political administration. The President of the United States addressed this language to the Governor of Alabama: "That in obedience to the high and solemn duty imposed upon him by the Constitution of the United States, and to enable the loyal people of the State to organize a State government, whereby justice may be established, domestic tranquility restored, and loyal citizens protected in all their rights of life, liberty, and property." "The Governor should convene a convention composed of loyal citizens only, for the purpose of altering and amending the Constitution of the State; and with authority to exercise within the limits of the State of Alabama all the powers necessary and proper to enable such loyal people to restore said State to constitutional relations to the Federal Government, and to present such a Republican form of government as will entitle the State to the guarantee of the United States therefor." The Ordinance 26, relative to the confirmation of judgments and decrees of courts, under the condition we have mentioned, was adopted by this convention. Subsequently another convention was held in December, 1867, under authority of Congress, and an ordinance of similar import, being Ordinance 39, was then adopted. These are embodied in legislative acts.

Code of 1867, §§ 2825, 2827, 2832; Acts 1868: 186, 187, 415.

The convention parliament of Great Britain in April and May, 1660, preparatory to the restoration of Charles II. to the throne, adopted a similar ordinance. The courts which had been setting since 1648, were obnoxious to the same imputations as the courts of the States we have mentioned. They did not acknowledge the authority nor hold the commission of the king.

Their judgments would not have been enforceable without his authority.

The restoration of the Union to its normal condition followed upon the adoption of the ordinances and acts we have mentioned.

The jurisprudence of the United States has uniformly recognized the principle embodied in these ordinances. No case exists in which the Supreme Court has enquired into the commission of the judge who has occupied a State court, or whether the court recognized the confederacy, or the United States. They have treated them as competent courts to render judgments binding inter partes.

Nor has there been any general principle formulated, which will enable us at once to declare that any of the judgments would be annulled or disregarded. The cases of Dean vs. Nelson, 10 Wall. 158, and Lasere vs. Rochereau, 17 Wall. 437, presented instances of persons expelled forcibly from the limits of the jurisdiction of the court, which tried the causes by the authority of military officers of the United States as enemies, and prohibited to return. Their property was seized and sold under judicial proceedings of a local court in their absence, having notice of the facts. The judgments were not respected. In Lockhart vs. Horn, 17 Wall. 570, 1 Woods, 628, a judgment under a decree of a court of probate, directing payment to the heirs of a decedent in the bonds of the Confederate States, issued to aid them to carry on their war, was disregarded as illegal, and not bending upon an absent legatee.

The court has refused to interfere with judgments rendered against persons who were proceeded against as absentees by their creditors, who had gone into the Confederate States after the war had begun.

Ludlow vs. Ramsey, 11 Wall.
McQuiddy vs. Ware, 20 Wall. 15.

The court held that Congress could empower the courts of the United States to proceed, as courts having common law jurisdiction, to confiscate the property of persons engaged in rebellion, and that seizure and publications were appropriate proceedings to acquire jurisdiction of the party. No constitutional restriction was contravened by such process.

Confiscation cases, 20 Wall. 92, 114, 115.

In these cases it was determined that suits could be brought against enemies in the hostile territory, or who were abroad.

11 Wall. 259; 18 Wall. 106.

This assertion of sovereign power on the part of the United States needs no vindication. But when we notice those proceedings, we are at a loss to find any argument upon which the decree of the court of Alabama to remove Ketchum from his trust, can be impugned. The power of a court to employ this form of proceeding is sanctioned by the practice of all of the States and of the Union.

The only reply which has been made to these instances is, that the tribunals of the Southern States were limited in their jurisdiction to cases of domestic interest and of local operation; to cases between citizens of the States. But no such limitation has been announced by Congress and none by the international law. The opinion of the court in Horn vs. Lockhart, 17 Wall. 570, states the principle broadly: "That the acts of the several States in their individual capacities, and of the different departments of government, executive, judicial and legislative, during the war, so far as they did not impair or tend to impair the supremacy of the national authority or the just rights of citizens under the constitution, are in general to be treated as valid and binding."

It is obvious that the decree against Ketchum does not relate to any matter of national concernment, and that he has not been deprived of any sort of a right which a citizen of the United States is endowed with. The removal of a trustee is one of municipal jurisdiction, and was applied in a case plainly warranted by the law. The court say: "The existence of a State of insurrection and war did not loosen the bonds of society, or do away with civil government or the regular administration of the laws: order was to be preserved, police regulations maintained, crime prosecuted, property protected, contracts enforced, marriages celebrated, estates settled, and the transfer and descent of property regulated precisely as in time of peace." That class of rights and duties which grow out of the deed of trust we have been discussing are, as we have shown, constantly subject to the governmental care of the States and not of the Federal Government. In this case there were wrongs done and rights violated that justified the suit. In the plea that was made of the decree in this case, every fact pleaded was admitted. The jurisdiction of the court over the subject of the suit, the regularity of the course of procedure, the identity of the causes set out in the bill and the decree with those which the statute declares to be sufficiency, the authority of the court to pronounce the decree, are all confessed in setting down the plea for a hearing on its sufficiency. No averment can be made against the decree itself for error or mistake. The decree imports absolute verity.

The only question was, whether the court had a power to remove from the place for any cause whatsoever, by this process. The causes specified are those the law sanctions as sufficient.

In the case of Sprott vs. United States, 20 Wall., 464; the Supreme Court discriminates between the acts and proceedings of the State Governments during the war, and those of their common head, the Confederate Government. The recognition of the existence and the validity of the acts of the so-called Confederate Government, and that of the States which yielded a temporary support to that government, stand on very different grounds, and are governed by very different considerations, is the conclusion of the Supreme Court.

The court says of the State Governments: "The same constitutions, the same laws for the protection of property and personal rights remained, and were administered by the same officers. These laws, necessary in their recognition and administration to the existence of organized society were the same with slight exceptions, whether the authorities of the State acknowledge allegiance to the true or the false federal power. They were the fundamental principles for which civil society is organized into government in all countries, and must be respected in their administration under whatever dominant authority they may be exercised."

The court with great emphasis declares the exception: It was when the powers were perverted to the aim or the end of giving aid to the rebellion, that the act would be disregarded as null and void.

The same high tribunal in a still later case repeat these distinct declarations with approbation, and in respect to the legislative acts of the States, say: "All the enactments of the de facto legislatures in the insurrectionary States during the war which were not hostile to the Union, or to the authority of the general government, and which were not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or of the States, have the same validity as if they had been enactments of legitimate legislations. Any other doctrine than this would work great and unnecessary hardship upon the people of those States without any corresponding benefit to the citizens of other States, and without advantage to the national government."

United States vs. Ins. Company, 22 Wall., 99-103.

It is impossible to draw a rational distinction between the case before this court, and that before the Supreme Court of the United States, in the application of a principle. The principle includes a sanction to all laws and all judicial proceedings which are domestic in their nature, and which affect only the municipal concerns and interests of the State itself. The decree rendered in the Court of Chancery at Mobile, we have shown to have been of this character.

A long list of cases may be made in which the Supreme Court have affirmed the potency of the decisions of the courts of a country in the possession of jurisdiction and control. The Congress of the United States claimed the land from the Iberville to the Perdido, including the whole coast from the latter river to the Island of Orleans. Spain rĕtained possession untill 1813, even of Mobile.

But no judgment or decree of the courts was ever disturbed. On the contrary, the proceedings of the courts, as well as the administrative acts of the government, were affirmed.

Keene vs. McDonough, 8, P. 508.
Pollard vs. Kibbe, 14. P. 353.

The convention parliament which restored Charles II, was held about one month before the return of the king. The judicial proceedings in the courts during the period of rebellion and usurpation, were all recognized as valid. No question has ever been raised in the courts of Great Britain as to the cases embraced in the confirmatory act. Upon the restoration of Louis the XVIII. to the throne of France, the civil code of Napoleon, the existing laws, the ordinary courts and tribunals, the rights of person and property, were deliberately confirmed. These public declarations demonstrate that the common understanding of civilized nations accord with the opinions of the Supreme Court in all their latitude, and that the declarations were made that order and tranquillity might be promoted and insured. The acts of the conventions of the State, and of the Legislature of the State, were formed in the broadest statesmanship. An opportunity was afforded to every person to correct any irregularity, error or vice in the judgments or decrees confirmed.

No man was concluded who was willing to affirm there was a meritorious defence.

Four years from the removal of every obstacle to appearance in the courts were granted to every person to obtain redress against any wrong. During that period neither Ketchum nor any holder of bonds of the company objected to the decree.

The successors appointed by the court performed their duties under that decree, from 1863 to 1876, unchallenged by Ketchum or any bondholder. Duncan & Elliott went into possession as successors unchallenged, and so continued until the cause was at issue and a master appointed to make a report of the debts due by the corporation. When Ketchum was inquired for, his constituents—his list of bondholders who required his services—Belloni was the only one named, the holder of six bonds; while the holders of about eight-elevenths of the debt of the company brand his pretensions not only with contempt, but as mischievous.

He has nobody to support him thus far but Belloni, and, possibly, Moran.

His pretensions were revived, not by the call of bondholders, but at the instigation of an attorney who sought him out. Up to that date he had made no protest, opposition, assertion or claim, but acquiescence full and entire. The corporation had demanded his removal, the bondholders approved and now rise up to confirm. He submitted.

Since 1863, there has been default after default on the part of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company. When the war ended, its railroads, equipments, estates, were dilapidated. There was conference after conference with creditors, and respites and delays were granted. There were inspections of its securities and titles. Ketchum had no share or participation in all of this. He had been removed. Others were in the place of the nominees in the deed. Ketchum never asked for admittance.

He knew of the decree, and he made no effort to cause its rescision. He suffered all the periods for appeal or other defence to pass. The decree was not only res judicata, but irreversible. It is not necessary, in order to render a transaction unimpeachable, that any positive act of confirmation or release should take place. It is enough if proof can be given of a fixed and unbiassed determination not to impeach the transaction. This may be proved either by acts evidencing acquiescence, or by the mere lapse of time, during which the transaction has been allowed to stand.

Stone vs. Godfrey, 5 D. Mc. G., 86.
Phillips vs. Gatling, 7 Hare, 525.
Stafford vs. Stafford, 1 D. & G., 202.
Bowman vs. Watkin, 1 How., 189.
Wagner vs. Baird, 7 H., 234.
Askew vs. Hooper, 28 Ala., 634.
Johnson vs. Toulmin, 18 Ala., 50.

Acquiescence is not merely inaction. It is where a person having a right stands by and sees another dealing with the property in a manner inconsistent with the right, and if he makes no objection while the act is in progress, he cannot afterwards complain. This is the proper sense of the word acquiescence.

Duke of Leeds vs. Amherst, 2 Phil., 117.

The doctrine of carrying equities by acquiescence I consider to be one of the most important to be attended to, for otherwise there is a great danger of the principles of a Court of Equity thus improperly exercised producing great injustice. A man who with full knowledge of his case does not complain, but deals with his adversary as if he had no case against him, builds up from day to day, a wall of protection for such opponent which will probably defeat any attack upon him.

Vigus vs. Pike, 8 C. & F., 562.

The deed of trust shows a million of acres for sale by corporation, and trustee to pay bonds year by year, as the land can be sold; sales have been made and the bonds reduced by such sales, as the accounts show, several hundred thousand dollars. Since 1863 there has been continuous default, with the exception of three years; the funded debt, consisting of unpaid coupons, for interest, is nearly half as much as the amount of bonds, and yet, since 1863, and during this period of embarrassment, there has been between Ketchum and the corporation and the creditors, no intercourse, counsel, co-operation.

If the decree were at all open to animadversion, this conduct would make it impossible for him to assail it. He has made an outer wall around the decree which he can never surmount. The doctrines of a Court of Equity oppose themselves to the covert and cunning attempts of bad persons to bring forward stale claims for sordid and personal aims. Ketchum has no sort of interest in the corporation or the bonds of the company. He has been withdrawn from all intercourse with it since 1861. He knows nothing of its business. Other persons have been performing duties which were incumbent upon him, had he not acquiesced in the decree of the Court of Chancery. He has known of this. He has never settled the account with the corporation for the eighteen bonds. He has eschewed the company. He has known that his successors had been appointed and were acting, and were in possession of the property. Their bonds have been given, their bills filed in court, their cause was at issue when Ketchum makes his appearance on the conditions disclosed by himself in his deposition. The Supreme Court of the United States says in reference to a claim so presented: "A Court of Chancery refuses its assistance to sustain a stale claim. There must be reasonable diligence as well as good faith, to call the powers of the court into activity, and, if there be wanting diligence or good faith, the court will remain passive and refuse its assistance. If the plaintiff shows laches, he is not entitled to any aid from the court. The proof is conclusive on this subject."

McNight vs. Taylor, 1 How., 161.
Maxwell vs. Kennedy, 8 How., 211.

The doctrine of acquiescence applies as well to the force of judgments as to the confirmation of legal rights against outstanding equities, or the establishment of equitable rights against a legal title.

A party by a release of errors, may preclude any objection to the validity of the judgment—such as want of notice.

21 Ill. Rep. 274.

A person who has taken a benefit from a judgment is not allowed afterwards to impeach its validity.

Horn vs. Lockhart, 17 Wall., 570.
24 La. Rep., 289.

Defendant who has assisted in the execution of the order of sale, will not be permitted to impeach the sale.

Erwin vs. Lowery, 7 How., 173.

This decree has been executed, the period for attack by appeal, bill of reviewed petition for re-hearing, has long ago expired. The longest statute of limitations in respect to the enjoyment of property, had become operative before the bill was filed. The time given by the State Conventions for assailing the decree had elapsed, and the confirmation by these had become absolute and unconditional.

The question, then, finally comes whether a court of the United States, within the limits of the State, can allow an impeachment of all of these judicial and legislative acts collaterally.

The Supreme Court of the United States may correct a judgment or a decree in a court of a State, by sending a writ of error to that court, for errors apparent in the record and proceedings, within the terms of an act of Congress on the subject.

That the court might reverse a decree or judgment affirming the confirmatory power of the State statutes we have referred to. But no court has the power to say that a judgment or decree within the ordinary jurisdiction of the State court, under a State law, and when the procedure has been correspondent to State statutes, is not binding between the parties to that judgment or decree after the period for a review according to law, has expired.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL,
Sol. for Plaintiffs.

Andrews, Clifford

Bangs

~~Morris~~

Morris

Hoadley

Ala

Supreme Court of the United States.

NO. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM, et al.

vs.

WILLIAM B. DUNCAN, et al.

PETITION ON ORDER SUSPENDING SUPERSEDEAS.

GEORGE HOADLY,
P. PHILLIPS,
E. H. GRANDIN,
E. L. ANDREWS,
Of Counsel.

December, 1877.

R. O. Polkinhorn, Printer, 632 and 634 D Street, Washington, D. C.

Jan 21 1878 Supersedeas application denied

[illegible] Jos

4

Supreme Court of the United States.

MORRIS KETCHUM, et al.

vs.

WILLIAM B. DUNCAN, et al.

Petition upon order suspending Supersedeas.

The appellants respectfully petition for a hearing upon the order affecting the supersedeas, for the following reasons:

They have not had any hearing in respect thereof, either oral or on paper.

The first motion made by appellees was for the vacation or modification of the supersedeas. This application was denied by the court after oral hearing.

The appellees then moved to dismiss the appeal. In replying to the papers served on that motion, coupled as it was with the repetition of motion to vacate supersedeas, the appellants had not supposed, under the rules, that the motion to vacate supersedeas could be re-argued without leave, nor were they willing to relinquish their right to oral argument on that motion. The appellants did not therefore discuss the question of vacating the supersedeas, supposing that that question had been determined.

Greatly to the surprise of the appellants, the court, in denying the motion to dismiss the appeal, took occasion to suspend the supersedeas. Hence this is the first occasion on which the appellants have been heard on the question decided.

First. The court has no power to affect the statutory right of supersedeas, obtained by compliance with the acts of Congress. (Sec. 1007 Rev. Stat.)

This writ does not obtain by virtue of the inherent judicial powers of this court, but is derived entirely from the statutes.

"Appeals and writs of error do not become a supersedeas and stay execution in the court where the judgment or decree remains by virtue of process issued by this court, merely as such, but they are constituted such by the act of Congress when the conditions prescribed in the twenty-third section of the Judiciary Act are fulfilled. When those conditions are complied with the act of Congress operates to suspend the jurisdiction of the court, to which the writ is addressed, and stay execution in the case pending the writ of error until the case is determined or remanded." (Slaughter House Cases, 10 Wallace, per. Clifford J.)

Congress has enacted that, upon furnishing security for "all damages and costs," a party "may" obtain—which is here equivalent to shall obtain—a supersedeas. And the statute proceeds to declare that in such cases "execution shall not issue until the expiration of ten days." Could there be a clearer indication of the intent of Congress, that when security was furnished execution shall not issue? Why prohibit the Circuit Court, if this court can immediately award execution?

How can this court dispense with this right? The exercise of it may sometimes operate harshly, but Congress has said that the compensation of the injured appellee shall be sought on the bond.

Certainly the power of the court cannot be sought in the granting of writs necessary to the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. That may be aided by granting a supersedeas, but not by avoiding one.

Not a single case, it is believed, can be found in the history of this court where the dispensing with the statute exercised in this case has ever previously been imposed. It is submitted that the absence of any such exercise of power among the numerous Chancery causes which have come before this court is to be taken as strongly indicating a judicial recognition of the absence of the power. Indeed, the statutory provisions in relation to appeals, by which they are made to conform to writs of error, preclude the existence of any power to dispense with the supersedeas. To permit execution in a common law cause, negatives the idea of a supersedeas. In equity, the full limit of power to interfere with the res pending supersedeas, is when necessary for its preservation, which cannot be predicated except of perishable property. For reasons of public policy to guard appellate rights, the legislative power has purposely constituted a supersedeas an absolute and inflexible right. Moreover, as we shall show, one of the very errors here complained of is the ordering of a sale by the Circuit Court under the circumstances of this case. To prevent that erroneous sale, the supersedeas was given. To take away the supersedeas and allow the sale, is really to prevent any correction, and to nullify the appeal.

Second. We respectfully submit that, conceding the power to supersede the supersedeas, it most oppressively operates against the appellants by the order made.

The only adequate security to compensate the appellants for the loss of their supersedeas, is the deposit of money sufficient to cover the principal ($365,000) and interest of their bonds, with costs.

The coupon question is the least important in respect of the amount involved, among all the errors complained of in the decree below.

Another error is as follows:

The bills filed by the appellants in Alabama, had for their object, to declare the first mortgage bonds to be paramount liens on the entire road, from the Ohio River to the Gulf of Mexico. Principally, it was sought to have their priority decreed over some two millions of dollars of claims on the one hundred and eighteen miles of the road in Tennessee. On the other hand, these claims, known as substitution bonds, had filed their bill of foreclosure in Tennessee. When the cause came on for hearing in Alabama, it was found that personal jurisdiction could not be obtained in that district so as to determine the question of the priorities as between the first mortgage bonds and the substitution bonds. Under those circumstances, these appellants contended below that no decree of sale should be made of the entire road, including the Tennessee section, until it had been determined whether these two millions of dollars of claims were superior or inferior to the mortgage about to be foreclosed. Without the settlement of these priorities it would be impossible to have a fair sale, or obtain any adequate bid upon the sale of the road. No one could bid at a sale under our mortgage without knowing whether he was obtaining a property burdened with two millions of encumbrances. But the court below ordered a sale, subject to the Tennessee lien as it might be finally determined.

We submit that there is abundant authority to show error in a decree so made. The proportion of these claims to the first mortgage is fully one-third, and in this percentage, will the appellants suffer in respect of that item if the sale be allowed to proceed? This was an error we proposed to show, and this was the sale ordered without determination of priorities that we superseded. Correction of error and supersedeas are thus inextricably mingled.

It must also be borne in mind that the circumstances of the litigation have greatly changed since the supersedeas was granted. A decree in favor of the substitution bonds, declaring them a paramount lien on the road in Tennessee, has been lately entered, and that cause is likewise now in this court. If the road be now sold, it must necessarily be burthened with this two-million dollar lien, and will produce at least one-third less upon a sale under our mortgage. If our appeal and supersedeas of the Tennessee decree hereafter results in our favor, we can gain nothing by it, because the whole road, under this order, will be sold subject to that lien. When it is remembered that these parties, seeking to force that unjust result, are holders of nearly every dollar of the Tennessee claims, their object is apparent.

Third. As the order stands the appellants must inevitably lose all the principal of their bonds—four hundred thousand dollars of first mortgage principal and interest owned and represented by Moran Brothers, and fully before this Court.

Such a result arises in the following manner: Hays and Dupuy representing a large amount of bonds, applied below for leave to use them in bidding as so much cash. As this mortgage did not confer such a privilege as the covenants of more modern mortgages do, the Court coupled with the privilege of such use of the bonds, the requirement that all first mortgage bondholders should have the right to participate in the bid in bonds, and on the terms of such bid. The time within which such participation could be elected by any bondholder was originally fixed "at any time down to the day of sale." This was subsequently altered so as to limit the time for the use of the bonds by those who had not joined the Hays' party (they having the preponderating amount) to September 1st, 1877.

These appellants were afterwards granted their supersedeas, and relying upon that, they have not availed themselves of this provision of the decree. By the order, just granted, they are deprived of all benefit of the supersedeas which stayed this mode of bidding But by their reliance upon the efficacy of the supersedeas, they have lost the vital protection secured to them.

The Hayes' party still retain this privilege accorded them, but through no fault of the appellants, the time for their election is gone by, and they are, by the present order deprived of the alternative right which they sought by appeal with supersedeas. The Hay's party can now bid in the road for bonds alone, and the appellants would not get a dollar of dividend.

This is not like a case of merely changing the character of the fund with the retention of a continuing lien on the proceeds. But it is taking away the mortgaged property, which is to be obtained for obligations of the debtor itself to be delivered as bid tokens on the sale, and by such delivery becoming ipso facto worthless. These appellants would thus lose their lien on the railroad, and there would be nothing to represent their security but cancelled bonds. If the amount of the first mortgage as undisputed were fixed as an upset price, the appellants would have some protection, because the amount of their bonds, and, in fact, the entire $836,000, not in the scheme of reorganization, would have to be met by cash moneys in the bid. This was applied for below as a part of the decree, and its refusal is assigned as error here.

If the decree were now modified in that respect, there would then be really a change in the fund by a sale. If the court should annul our supersedeas, we only ask what will secure us the money called for by our bond and mortgage.

Fourth. The amount of money to be deposited to cover the four hundred thousand dollars now in the appeal, should also be increased by providing for a similar deposit to secure the bondholders who have not joined either plan of reorganization of whom there are $471,000 first mortgage, besides the $365,000 in this appeal, making $865,000 first mortgage bonds. They are legally represented by the trustees, and many of them, as shown in the papers, relied upon, this stay and abstained from availing themselves of the clause of the decree in reference to using their bonds for bidding. The present order leaves them naked,—forced to lose everything. They are cestuie que trust entitled to the protection of chancery, and they should be secured by a similar deposit of money. Of course "the Hays' party may be willing that this Court should now make an order giving an extension of the time for others to participate in their bid, as contemplated by the decree. But this would end the appeal as well as the supersedeas by cancelling all the bonds, when used, on the bid, and we would be thus driven against our appeal and supersedeas to take a new first mortgage bond for $440, in lieu of our mortgage for $1,000, which is what is offered by this scheme of reorganization. This is a favor which we do not covet, and which it would be eminently unjust by vacating our stay, without securing the principal of our bonds, to force us to yield to. We submit that the court would not grant the favor to the appellees of destroying our supersedeas when we will then be forced to give up our appeal, also, in order to save anything on our bonds at the sale. To avoid this result, the only safe course offering any security to appellants and saving their right of appeal, is to require deposit of the face of their securities. If the appellees are deemed to have any claim to this favor, it is but fair and just that we be secured the amount of our interest in the property, particularly as we claim that the decision of the appeals in our favor will so reduce the liens as to make the first-mortgage bonds good security, dollar for dollar. If the appellant obtain a sale before this determination, and without our fault, we should be secured fully. The unusual nature of the order should also be considered in securing us.

The appellants have furnished bond for one hundred thousand dollars. By means of that bond, they have stayed the sale for six months. They are liable to be held in the above sum, since the order of this Court substantially vacating the stay. At least some cancellation of this bond should be provided for in the order, as the Court has held the bond good as supersedeas, and the vacation of the stay is matter of favor. The bond is of no good to appellants as a stay, if the order be continued. Stay sureties should be released, and the appellants allowed to file an ordinary appeal bond. But why all these complications to aid in an alleged desire for a sale of the property, when those who were successful below are offered the opportunity to submit both branches of the case to this court, without delay, on printed argument?

Without a hearing on the merits, with our security and position unimpaired, justice cannot be done to the one and a half million dollars of bonds of various series who have not trusted in the scheme of purchase sought to be practically and irrevocably accomplished in advance of the knowledge of their rights, as against that number of bondholders who are waiting the decision of this court.

Your petitioners pray that the order should be vacated for want of power, or the appellees required to deposit $400,000 in the registry of the Court, to secure the appellants, instead of $14,000 as in the present order.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. H. GRANDIN,
P. PHILLIPS,
E. L. ANDREWS.
of Counsel.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

Motion for leave to discontinue Appeal of De Watteville, Ziegler, and (in part) Chuffard.

F. N. BANGS,
For Motion.

NEW YORK:
Evening Post Steam Presses, 208 Broadway, corner of Fulton Street.
1878.

IN THE

Supreme Court

OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1877. No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM AND AL.,
Appellants,

vs.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN AND AL.,
Appellees.

To the Honorable the Supreme Court of the United States, &c.:

The petition of William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. Haskins Du Puy, and William Butler Duncan, respectfully shows as follows:

This appeal was originally taken by Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard De Watteville, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, each of the said appellants, except the said Morris Ketchum, claiming to be a holder, in his own right, of first mortgage bonds of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, these petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Du Puy, being now the holders of upwards of five millions of dollars of bonds, and the said Hays, Pierson and Du

Puy being also the holders of coupons maturing in the year 1874, to the principal amount of five hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars; and the matter in controversy in this cause and on this appeal being, the continuing obligation and lien of said coupons of 1874.

These petitioners further say that this appeal is from a decree rendered upon the consolidation of three suits in equity, pending in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, in one of which suits the said D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard De Watteville, Henry Jump and Masson Chavannes were plaintiffs, as bondholders bringing their suit on their own behalf and on the behalf of such other bondholders as should come in and contribute to the expense of the action. These petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Du Puy, as holders of said coupons, were hostile in interest to such appellants on this appeal. In said action in which D'Orelli Ziegler and others were plaintiffs in the court below, Charles Moran appeared as the attorney in fact of the said Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump and Chavannes. The said Charles Moran and his copartners in the firm of Moran Brothers, namely, D. Comyn Moran and Amedee D. Moran were examined as witnesses in the said suit of D'Orelli Ziegler and others, and the said Charles Moran testified that the said Rudolph Merian was the holder of nine first mortgage bonds of two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars each, numbered respectively, 4,823, 5,792, 2,839, 2,841, 3,251, 2,844, 3,337, 3,519, and 3,520; and the said Charles Moran further testified that the said Eugene Renevier was the owner and holder of five first mortgage bonds for two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively 4,501, 4,502, 4,503, 4,535, and 2,691; and the said Charles Moran further testified that the said Charles Carrard was the owner of twelve first mortgage bonds of two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively 703 to 705, 3,883 to 3,886, 3,817, 5,916, 1,854, 5,069, and 4,849; and the said Charles Moran further testified that the said Cephise Chuffard was the holder of fourteen first mortgage bonds of two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand-dollars,each, numbered respectively, 953, 1,298, 2,215, 3,491. 4,054, 4,193 to 4,196, 4,514, 4,518, 4,520, 4,640, and 4,894; and the said Charles Moran further testified that the said Henry Jump was the holder of fourteen first mortgage bonds of two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively, 3,420, 1,471, 4,266, 4,273, 4,473, 4,053, 4,057, 4,575, 4,687, 4,992, 5,073, 5,926, 5,072, and 5,506, and of arrearage interest bonds, three for one thousand dollars each, and four for five hundred dollars each, numbered respectively, 47, 48, 49, 45, 111, 112, 312; and the said Charles Moran further testified that Masson Chavannes was the holder of seventeen first mortgage bonds for two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively, 297½, 3,530, 3,562, 3,947, 5,681, 736, 1,374, 1,444, 1,545, 1,761, 2,684, 2,773. 2,780, 3,321, 4,357, and 5,928; and the said Charles Moran further testified that the said D'Orelli Ziegler was the holder of eighteen first mortgage bonds for two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively, 2,112, 3,487, 4,247, 3,960, 3,950, 4,466, 4,494, 4,856, 4,878, 5,504, 4,868 to 4870, inclusive, altogether eighteen bonds; and the said Charles Moran further testified, that thesaid Bernard De Watteville was the holder of ninety-seven of said first mortgage bonds, for two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively as follows: 613. 646, 740 1,419, 1,752, 1,822, 1,930, 1,931, 1,939, 1,942. 1,955, 2,144, 2,550, 2,648, 2,699 2,798, 2,817, 2,818, 3,262, 3,294, 3,298, 3,299, 3,312, 3,339, 3,404, 3,410, 3,423, 3,548, 3,568, 3,576, 3,599, 3,601, 3,661, 3,662, 3,663, 3,766, 3,769, 3,770, 3,879, 3906, 3,907, 3,909, 3,910, 3,959, 4,116, 4,180, 4,187, 4,381, 4,383, 4,385, 4,476, 4,477, 4,478, 4,479, 4,497, 4,794, 4,882, 4,883, 5,017, 5,028, 5,029, 5,030, 5,031, 5,070, 5,218, 5,270, 5,284, 5,412, 5,413, 5,430, 5,469, 5,524, 5,560, 5,569, 5,656, 5,688, 5,689, 5,690, 5,691, 5,767, 5,769, 5,771, 4,962, 4,983, 4,984, 4,985, 4,986, 5,736, 5,737, 5,738, 5,739, 5,740, 5,744, 5,745, 5,746, 5,747, and 5,748; but these petitioners say, that of the said bonds so sworn to as belonging to the said D'Orelli Ziegler, only ten were proved before the master in the court below, which were proved in the name of Moran Brothers, and your petitioners are informed and believe that those numbered 4,868 to 4,870, 501 to 506, inclusive, were not proved before the master in the court below.

And these petitioners further say that the said D'Orelli Ziegler has assigned, transferred and delivered to the said Hays, Pierson and Du Puy, eighteen of said First Mortgage Bonds, including those so proved before the master as aforesaid; and that the said Bernard de Watteville has transferred, assigned and delivered to the said Hays, Pierson and Du Puy one hundred and two of the said First Mortgage Bonds, including the ninety-seven so sworn to as belonging to him by the said Charles Moran as aforesaid.

And these petitioners further say that of the said bonds so sworn to as belonging to the said Cephise Chuffard, ten have been transferred, assigned and delivered to the said Hays, Pierson and Du Puy, and are now held by them, numbered respectively 953, 1298, 2215, 3491, 4054, 4193, 4194, 4195, 4196 and 4514.

These petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Du Puy further say, that the said bonds of the said De Watteville, Chuffard and Ziegler respectively, which were transferred and delivered to them, were transferred simultaneously with the signature and delivery to them of a printed agreement of and concerning the said bonds so transferred, assigned snd delivered, which printed agreement is dated October 1, 1876, and among other things contains the following clauses and stipulations:

"First.—The said William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, are hereby constituted sasignees in trust, agents, managers and attorneys of the said parties hereto, who are creditors of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, or holders of any of the securities specified in said schedule hereto annexed, for the purpose of receiving the several demands of said creditors who become parties hereto, and of realizing, converting, managing and controlling the same, for the purposes, in the manner, and with the powers hereinafter specified.

"Second.—Each of the parties hereto, being a creditor of the said Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company at the time of the execution of this instrument, assigns, transfers, delivers, and makes over to the said William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, all the evidences of debt issued by said company, and claims against said company, now held by such subscribers hereto, whether in the shape of bond, coupon, note, judgment, open account, unliquidated demand, unpaid voucher or otherwise, to be held by the said Hays, Pierson and Du Puy, as such assignees, agents, managers and attorneys, in the manner and for the purposes, and upon the trusts, so hereinafter declared concerning the same.

"Fifteenth.—And the said assignees and attorneys, as transferees and assignees of the subscribers to this instrument, shall have the same rights and relations to the foreclosure suits now pending, and to the complainants in said foreclosure suits, and to the receivers in said suits, and to the funds in their hands, which the subscribers to this agreement now have or would have if they continued to be holders of the bonds and claims subscribed hereto, and shall be entitled to the same share of the proceeds of the present management of the said company, and to the same share of the proceeds of the sale of such property which their assignors would have upon a discontinuance of said foreclusure suits, and upon an accounting, or upon a sale or distribution of the proceeds."

And these petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Du Puy further say that they have given notice and information of their ownership of the said bonds so as aforesaid formerly held by the said D'Orelli Zeigler and Bernard de Watteville respectively, to E. L. Andrews, Esq., claiming to be solicitor for the appellants on this appeal.

Therefore these petitioners pray the court for an order withdrawing and discontinuing this appeal so far as it respects the said D'Orelli Ziegler and the said Bernard De Watteville, and so far as it respects the bonds formerly held by them, and so far as it respects the said bonds formerly held by the said Cephise Chuffard, and numbered respectively 953, 1208, 2215, 3491, 4054, 5193, 4194, 4195, 4196 and 4514; and that the names of the said Bernard De Watteville and D'Orelli Ziegler may be stricken from the record as appellants on this appeal; and that a minute be made of record on this appeal, in this court, that your petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Du Puy have succeeded to the rights of the said Bernard De Watteville and D'Orelli Ziegler respectively, as creditors under said mortgage, and to the rights of the said Cephise Chuffard, as a creditor under said mortgage upon the said ten bonds last hereinabove mentioned, and that such further or other or different relief may be granted to your petitioners as may be proper in the premises, and as the nature of the case may require.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

William H. Hays,
William S. Pierson,
T. Haskins Du Puy,
W. Butler Duncan.
By F. N. Bangs, their Counsel.

United States of America, } ss.:
Southern District of New York. }

William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. Haskins Du Puy and William Butler Duncan, being duly and severally sworn, do depose and say, and each for himself says, that he has read the foregoing petition and knows the contents thereof, and that the same is true to his own knowledge, except as to the matters therein stated upon information and belief, and as to those matters he believes it to be true.

Wm. S. Pierson,
W. H. Hays,
T. Haskins Du Puy,
W. Butler Duncan.

Sworn to before me, this 5th day of January, 1878,
Lucius W. How,
(124) Notary Public,
N. Y. Co.

Gentlemen,—You will please to take notice that upon the foregoing petition, and upon the papers on the files of this court, on this appeal, the court will be moved on the fourteenth day of January, 1878, on behalf of the petitioners, and of Bernard De Watteville, D'Orelli Ziegler and Cephise Chuffard, for a rule or order in conformity with the prayer of the said petition.

Dated New York, January 5th, 1878.

Yours, &c.,
F. N. Bangs,
Solicitor and of Counsel for petitioners.

To E. L. Andrews, Esq.,
Of Counsel, &c.

٣

[illegible]

IN THE

SUPREME COURT of the UNITED STATES,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

RUDOLPH MERIAN et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
ADRIAN ISELIN et al.,
Appellees.

AFFIDAVIT ON MOTION.

New York:
EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 BROADWAY, COR. FULTON ST.

1878.

IN THE

Supreme Court 1

OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

RUDOLPH MERIAN, AND AL.
Appellants,
vs.
ADRIAN ISELIN, RICHARD T. WILSON, William Butler Duncan, 2
Trustees, &c.,
Appellees.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Southern District of New York. } ss:

William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, and T. Haskins Du Puy, being duly sworn, do severally depose and say as follows:

This appeal is taken from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Western District of Tennessee, in a suit in equity, brought in the said court by the appellees, for the purpose of foreclosing a 3 mortgage commonly known as the Tennessee substitution mortgage.

The said mortgage was executed by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, in the year 1871, to the said trustees, to declare and continue a lien, previously 4 created, and for the protection of an issue of bonds commonly known as Tennessee substitution bonds, upon which there is due, for principal and interest, about the sum of two millions of dollars.

The said mortgage covers 118 miles of road belonging to the said Railroad Company, and situate within the state of Tennessee, but does not cover any property ouside of the state of Tennessee, although the entire road of said company extends from Mobile, in the State of Alabama, through the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky, to Columbus in the State of Kentucky.

Said road is incumbered by other mortgages, covering 5 the entire length of the road from Mobile to Columbus, one of which is known as the mortgage of 1853; but while the actual lien of the said Tennessee substitution mortgage upon so much of the road as is situated within the State of Tennessee is not disputed, the question upon this appeal is, whether the same is prior in lien to said mortgage made by the said company in the year 1853, covering the entire road.

In any event, so much of the said road as lies within the state of Tennessee must be the subject of a separate sale, inasmuch as that part of the road is separately mortgaged to the said Iselin, Wilson and Duncan as trustees as aforesaid. The said Hays, Pierson and Du Puy are the owners of all but sixty thousand 6 dollars of the indebtedness secured by the said Tennessee substitution mortgage, and are the parties possessing nearly the entire interest represented on this appeal by the appellees; and the said Hays, Pierson and Du Puy are also the holders of about ninety per cent. of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage of 1853, which covers the entire road as aforesaid; and it is almost a matter of but little importance to these deponents which of said mortgages is decreed to have priority over the other.

There was lately pending in the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Southern District of Alabama, an action in equity to foreclose said mortgage of 1853, in which action D'Orelli Ziegler, 7

Bernard de Watteville, Masson Chavannes and Henry Jump were co-plaintiffs, and in said action, Charles Moran, the attorney in fact of the appellants, Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, was examined as a witness, and his deposition was taken under commission; and in said deposition the said Charles Moran testified that the said Rudolph Merian was the holder of nine first mortgage bonds for two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively 4,823, 5,792, 2,839, 2,841, 2,844, 3,251, 3,337, 3,519 and 3,520; and the said Charles Moran further testified that the said Eugene Renevier was the holder 8 of five first mortgage bonds for two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively 4,501, 4,502, 4,503, 4,535, 2,691; and the said Charles Moran further testified, that the said Charles Carrard was the owner of twelve first mortgage bonds for two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively 703 to 705, 3,883 to 3,886, 3,817, 5,916, 1,854, 5,069 and 4,849; and the said Charles Moran further testified, that the said Cephise Chuffard was the owner of fourteen first mortgage bonds of two hundred and twenty five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively 953,
1,298, 2,215, 3,491, 4,054, 4,193 to 4,196, 4,514, 4,518, 9
4[illegible]0, 4,640, 4,894.

And these deponents say that there have been transferred, assigned and delivered to them, and there are now held by them, ten of the bonds so sworn to as belonging to Cephise Chuffard, namely, 953, 1298, 2215, 3491, 4054, 4193, 4194, 4195, 4196 and 4514, reducing her apparent ownership to four bonds.

And these deponents further say that the said ten bonds were assigned, transferred and delivered to these deponents, accompanied by a printed agreement, signed by the holder of said bonds, dated Oct. 1, 1876, containing on its face the following terms and stipulations:

10 "First.—The said William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy are hereby constituted assignees in trust, agents, managers and attorneys of the said parties hereto, who are creditors of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, or holders of any of the securities specified in said schedule hereto annexed, for the purpose of receiving the several demands of said creditors who become parties hereto, and of realizing, converting, managing and controlling the same, for the purposes, in the manner, and with the powers, hereinafter specified.

"Second.—Each of the parties hereto, being a creditor of the said Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company at the time of the execution of this instrument, assigns, transfers, delivers, and makes over to the said William 11 H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy all the evidences of debt issued by said company, and claims against said company, now held by such subscribers hereto, whether in the shape of bond, coupon, note, judgment, open account, unliquidated demand, unpaid voucher or otherwise, to be held by the said
Hays, Pierson and Du Puy, as such assignees, agents, managers and attorneys, in the manner and for the purposes and upon the trusts so hereinafter declared concerning the same.

"Fifteenth.—The said assignees and attorneys, as transferees and assignees of the subscribers to this instrument, shall have the same rights and relations to the foreclosure suits now pending, and to the complainants in said foreclosure suits, and to the receivers 12 in said suits, and to the funds in their hands, which the subscribers to this agreement now have or would have if they continued to be holders of the bonds and claims subscribed hereto, and shall be entitled to the same share of the proceeds of the present management of the property of said company, and to the same share of the proceeds of the sale of such property which their assignors would have upon a discontinuance of said foreclosure suits, or upon an accounting, or upon a sale or distribution of the proceeds."

These deponents further say that they have authorized the said Iselin, Wilson and Duncan, as trustees of said substitution mortgage, to consent and agree that in case the supersedeas granted on this appeal shall be vacated, the sum of forty thousand dollars shall be 13 reserved out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property situated within the State of Tennessee, to abide the event of this appeal, for the security of the said appellants against such damage as they may sustain in case the decree below should be executed pending this appeal, and in case, upon this appeal, it should be decreed that said Tennessee substitution mortgage is subordinate in lien to the said first mortgage of 1853; and these deponents now offer to consent to, approve, and ratify such an agreement, and they join in the prayer of the said Wilson, Iselin and Duncan, to have the said supersedeas vacated, and to permit the decree below to be executed upon such terms as 14 this court may deem just for the security of the said appellants as aforesaid.

Wm. S. Pierson,
W. H. Hays,
T. Haskins Du Puy,

Sworn to this 5th day of January, 1878, before me,

Lucius W. How,
(124) Notary Public,
N. Y. Co.

Supreme Court of the United States.

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN, R. T. WILSON & ADRIAN ISELIN, TRUSTEES,

VS.

Mobile & Ohio Railroad, Et Al.

ON APPEAL FROM CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE.

BRIEF OF HUMES & POSTON,

FOR COMPLAINANTS,

ON MOTION TO VACATE OR MODIFY THE SUPERSEDEAS GRANTED IN THIS CAUSE.

MEMPHIS, TENN.:
Price, Jones & Co., Printers and Binders, 12 Jefferson Street.
1878.

SUPREME COURT OF UNITED STATES.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN,
R. T. WILSON, and ADRIAN ISELIN, TRUSTEES,
vs.
MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD CO.

An Appeal from Circuit Court of United States for Western District of Tennessee.

BRIEF OF HUMES & POSTON, FOR COMPLAINANTS,

ON MOTION TO MODIFY OR VACATE THE SUPERSEDEAS IN THIS CAUSE.

This is a motion by the Appellees, William Butler Duncan, R. T. Wilson and Adrian Iselin, to vacate and set aside, or modify a supersedeas directing a stay of all proceedings, under a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee, foreclosing a mortgage on property of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, situated in Tennessee, and for a sale of the same.

The approval of the Appeal bond and order for supersedeas was made and signed by his Honor, Judge Swayne, on the 3d of December, 1877.

The bond is in the penalty of $20,000, and signed alone by Charles Moran.

The bill for the foreclosure and sale was filed by the Appellees, as trustees in a deed of trust and mortgage against the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, J. Foster Elliot, and others, the trustees under the second and third mortgages.

Subsequently, Rodolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, bondholders under a junior mortgage, were allowed to intervene as defendants and file their joint answer, claiming to be the owners of $40,000 of bonds, secured by the mortgage of November 1, 1853, called the second mortgage.

The mortgage sought to be foreclosed on the Tennessee road and property by this bill, was executed under these circumstances: The State of Tennessee, by an Act passed 11th February, 1852, and amendments thereto, determined to lend its aid, in State bonds, to this and other railroad companies for the completion of their roads. By this Act, a first lien in favor of the State was reserved to the State on all the property of said companies in the State, to secure the debt so created to the State. Under this Act the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company obtained from the State its bonds, which amounted, principal and interest, on May 25, 1871, to about $1,684,000. In the 12th Section of the Act of 1852, the State, as part of its lien, expressly reserved the authority to enact such future legislation as might be deemed necessary to secure and indemnify the State. In 1869, the State, by enactments, agreed to receive from the railroad companies, respectively, an amount of State bonds equal to the amount issued to them, and authorized the companies to issue a like amount of their own bonds in lieu of the State bonds, and upon delivering to the State the State bonds, and the issuance of a like amount of the company bonds in lieu of the former, the State could transfer its lien and mortgage to and for the security of the holders of these substitution company bonds.

The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company accepted this proposed method of adjusting its debt to the State, and on the 1st of July, 1871, issued its bonds, and with their proceeds took up and delivered to the State bonds of the State to the full amount of its debt. At the same time the State transferred its lien, and the company executed the deed of trust to the Appellees, as trustees, to secure the payment of these substitution bonds.

It was this lien and mortgage, which Appellees sought by their bill to foreclose by sale, and have declared a first and paramount lien. The Appellants claimed to be holders of $40,000 of bonds, secured by the Company's mortgage of November 1, 1853.

The case was heard on the bill, the answers of the original defendants, and of the Appellants, and the agreed state of facts set forth in the record; and on the 12th of November, 1877, the Court below entered a decree foreclosing the mortgage as prayed, and declaring the lien paramount. No appeal from this decree, or any part of it, was prayed in the Court below by any of the parties; but, on the 3d of December, 1877, the Appellants filed their petition for the allowance of an appeal and for a supersedeas, both of which were allowed by his Honor, Judge Swayne.

The Appellees insist that this supersedeas should be vacated—or so modified as to allow the sale to proceed, and sufficient of the proceeds retained to cover the entire claim of the Appellants. In support of this motion we submit the following reasons :

The Appellants only claim $40,000 of the second mortgage bonds, and by their supersedeas are staying the collection of $2,000,000. The Appellees, the trustees, will comply with any order of the Court to secure the claims of Appellants, by deposit of money or bonds to the full amount of their claims, or consent that, by order of this Court, the proceeds be held to cover them.

We submit, that this Court has jurisdiction and power to modify and regulate the supersedeas, so as to accomplish effectually the perfect security of the Appellants against loss, and at the same time inflict no unnecessary injury on the Appellees. While the Statutes and rules of this Court broadly provide that parties complying with the conditions imposed by the Acts of Congress, shall have a supersedeas, yet, as this supersedeas is granted simply to prevent injury to the Appellants, pending the appeal, the remedy should only have this extent. A sound, well-settled rule of construction, is, "that the terms are always to be understood as having a regard to the subject matter." Fanciful and absurd interpretations of Statutes would surely and frequently result from a disregard of this rule.

Potter's Dwarris on Statutes, p. 201.

No stronger illustration can be given than the case before the Court—where parties with a claim of $40,000, by appeal would stay the sale of $2,000,000 of property for two or three years, against the wish and interest of all other claimants.

This Court has held: "The meaning of the Legislature may be extended beyond the precise words used in the law, from the reason or motive upon which the Legislature proceeded—from the end in view—or the purpose which was designed; the limitation of the rule being, that to extend the meaning to any case not included in the words, the case must be shown to come within the same reason upon which the law-maker proceeded."

United States vs. Freeman, 3 Howard R., 565.

The facts of the case just cited are very dissimilar to the one before the Court, but the exact applicability of the rule and reasons to the case at bar, are manifest and palpable.

When the object and intent of a Statute is obvious and palpable, the grammatical sense of the words will be controlled by this intent.

Potter's Dwarris, p. 202;
Dorousseau vs. U. S., 6 Cranch R., 314.

The foregoing rules and reasons seem to us should be more readily applied in the case at bar, because the matters of supersedeas are addressed to a Court of superior and general jurisdiction, and not to a special tribunal—and to a Court, too, that has the most plenary powers, under Acts of Congress, to prescribe rules of practice and proceedure for itself, and the inferior Courts of the United States, also.

This Court has asserted its power to modify, add to, and change the extent of a supersedeas after it has been granted, either for the preservation of the "res," or to effectuate the exercise of its jurisdiction. This being so, the extent of this control must be discretionary in the Court.

Goddard vs. Ordway, 4 Otto R., 672.

This identical motion has recently, at the present term, been granted, and the supersedeas modified as is desired herein, in the case of The Mobile & Ohio R. R. Co. vs. Ketchum and others, on appeal, from Southern District of Alabama, at Mobile.

We insist, also, that under the agreement on which this case was tried, the parties stipulated to confer upon the Court and Judges a full discretion in this matter; and that the attention of his Honor, Judge Swayne, was not called to this stipulation. This stipulation is found at p. 29, clause 3, of Agreement No. 3, viz.: "The parties agree, that in case of a decree in favor of the plaintiffs, besides the power belonging to the parties to the suit to appeal, any bondholders owning a sufficient number of bonds, upon application to the Court or Judges, shall have liberty to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, without opposition from the Plaintiffs or other trustees, upon such terms as the Court or Judges shall prescribe to such applicant."

We submit, that the purpose of this stipulation was to protect the plaintiffs below from the ruinous effects of appeals and supersedeases on inconsiderable amounts of bonds.

The request, in the answer to file the answer for $600,000 of other bondholders, did not make them parties, and they are not parties to this appeal.

HUMES & POSTON,
Attorneys for Motion.

No. 879

Jany 14 1878

Morrison & Nathan, Law Printers, 23 Dey Street, N. Y,

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

Morris Ketchum et al.,

versus

William B. Duncan et al.

Petition of Second Mortgage Bondholders to vacate Order suspending Supersedeas.

To the Honorable the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States:

The petition of the Rogers Locomotive and Machine Works and other holders of two hundred and twenty thousand dollars of second mortgage bonds of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company respectfully shows:

That they are greviously injured by an order made by this Honorable Court for the suspension or vacation of the supersedeas which has been pending in this cause for nearly six months past.

Your petitioners show that the Answer of the Second Mortgage Trustees in this cause at Circuit, was put in under instructions from these petitioners, and so purports on its face. That answer sets up the same objections to the Tennessee Substitution Claims and the Duncan Coupons as the bills and pleadings of Morris Ketchum and the First Mortgage Bondholders rep-

Your petitioner shows that the Second Mortgage Bondholders aforesaid, have acted in unison with the appellants throughout the litigation.

They did not deem it necessary to supersede the execution of the decree of the Circuit Court, inasmuch as they relied upon the supersedeas obtained by the representatives of the First Mortgage Bondholders.

Your petitioners further show that the order permitting the sale of the railroad to proceed has been a total surprise to them, and leaves them without protection for the above amount of their bonds, inasmuch as the time to obtain a supersedeas on their own behalf has expired.

Your petitioners show that any consent, if such there be, by the trustees of the Second Mortgage to the sale of the Trust estate, was given without the knowledge of these petitioners, and was a breach of duty towards them, the said trustees, purporting to act on their behalf on the record. W. D. Dunn, one of petitioners trustees, is largely interested as a floating creditor of the corporation in the success of Hays and Dupuy's efforts to obtain a sale of the property.

Your petitioners show that until the determination of the contested liens and priorities on the property involving the amount of three millions of dollars, no fair or proper sale can be had, at which any adequate price is obtainable on behalf of the First and Second Mortgage Bonds. Your petitioners adopt all the allegations of the petition of the appellants herein in that behalf without repeating them here at length.

Your petitioners show that it is impossible to determine what amount of cash deposit less than the face of their securities, would be requisite to protect their Second Mortgage Bonds, and as a substitute for the security of the railroad in case the property be sold

Your petitioners respectfully submit that they should not be deprived of the security on which they loaned their money, and as respects some of these petitioners, supplied the company with its rolling stock. No place of banking deposit for any money could possibly be as safe as the realty and corpus of the trust itself, and which the supersedeas secures to answer the judgment of this Court.

Your petitioners unite with the appellants in the prayer that the cause be advanced, and that the order superseding the supersedeas be vacated; but if that order be not revoked, and if the mortgaged property be sold, that the amount of two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, the principal and interest of their bonds and costs, be required to be deposited to secure them and be paid to them, in case the appeals are successful; but if the appeals be unsuccessful, that they be entitled to participate in any plan of purchase of the property on the same terms as other Second Mortgage Bondholders.

~~E. H. GRANDEN~~, E. H. Grandin

Solicitor for Petitioners.

security of the rai

Supreme Court of the United States,

MORRIS KETCHUM,

VS.

WILLIAM B. DUNCAN.

BRIEF.

On power to suspend Supersedeas.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. H. GRANDIN,
P. PHILLIPS,
E. L. ANDREWS,
Of Counsel.

MORRISON & NATHAN,
Printers and Blank Book Manufacturers,
23 Dey Street, N. Y.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,

versus

WILLIAM B. DUNCAN ET AL.

Brief on power to suspend Supersedeas.

Appellate powers of the Supreme Court are only those conferred by Act of Congress. The second section of Article Third of the Constitution provides as follows: "In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make." Among the regulations of the appellate power is that contained in Section 1007 Revised Satutes. "In any case where a writ of error may be a supersedeas, the defendant may obtain such supersedeas by serving the writ of error by lodging a copy thereof for the adverse party in the Clerk's office where the record remains within sixty days, Sunday exclusive, after the recording of the judgment complained of, and giving the security required by law on the issuing of the citation, but if he desires to stay process on the judgment he may, having served his writ of error as aforesaid, give the security required by law within sixty days after rendition of such judgment or afterward with the permission of a Justice or Judge of the Appellate Court, and in such cases where a writ of error may be a supersedeas, execution shall not issue until the expiration of ten days." In connection with the above, it is provided in Section 1000, Revised Statutes. "BOND IN ERROR AND ON APPEAL. Every Justice or Judge signing citation or any writ of error shall, except in cases brought up by the United States or by the direction of any department of the Government, take good and sufficient security that the plaintiff in error or the appellant, shall prosecute his writ or appeal to effect, and if he fail to make his plea good, shall answer all damages and costs where the writ is a supersedeas and stays execution, or all costs only were it is not a supersedeasas aforesaid."

It is apparent from the foregoing provisions of the Statutes and of the Constitution the of United States that the appellate power of the Supreme Court is not an inherent judicial power such as may pertain to the Ancient Common Law Courts of appeal, but that it is derived entirely from the force of specific legislation and is limited thereby. Among the regulations provided by law under which the exercise of this appellate power exists are those relating to the stay of execution upon the decree rendered below. This stay is fixed and secured by virtue of the Statute. No interference therewith is granted to this Court among the grants of appellate power. The supersedeas does not proceed from this Court, but from the law itself, and so this Court has decided as follows: "Appeals and writs of error do not become a supersedeas and stay execution in the Court where the judgment or decree remains by virtue of process issued by the Court merely as such, but they are constituted such by the Acts of Congress when the Constitutions prescribed in the 23d Section of the Judiciary Act act as fulfilled. When these conditions are complied with, the Act of Congress operates to suspend the jurisdiction of the Court to which the writ is addressed and stay execution in the case, under the writ of error until the case is determined or remanded.

Slaughter House Cases, 10 Wallace, per Clifford, J.

It follows therefore that the source of the right to supersedeas and the conditions of the exercise being legislative, it can be abrogated or dispensed with only by warrant derived from statute, and in the absence of such warrant cannot be impaired.

In order that this court can assert the right to interfere with this statutory process which belongs to an appellant upon compliance with the requirements of the Act, we must be referred to some legislative provision conferring such jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court in its appellate character. A brief examination of the nature of the process of supersedeas, and of the manner in which it is obtained under the Acts of Congress, will satisfy the Court that interference with the functions of this writ is no part of the appellate power of this Court. By Sections 1000 and 1007, it appears that the granting of a supersedeas is not the act of the Court below, but that the Statute distinctly provides that the allowance of it shall be made by a Justice or Judge, including any Justice of the Appellate Court, The allowance of it does not enter into the judgment or decree or orders of the Court below, but it is a proceeding after the decree having no connection with the merits of the decree and being an auxiliary writ, not coming up before this Court as any part of the matter to be reviewed by it.

Now an examination of the statutes shows that no power to review the granting of such a writ is conferred on said Court.

It is provided as follows by section 690 of the Revised Statutes: "APPELLATE JURISDICTION. The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in the cases hereinafter specially provided for.

Section 701: "JUDGMENT OR DECREE ON REVIEW. The Supreme Court may affirm, modify or reverse any judgment, decree or order of a Circuit Court, or of a District Court in prize causes, lawfully brought before it for review, or may direct such judgment, decree or order to be rendered, or such further procedings to be had by the inferior Courts as the justice of the case may require."

An allowance of this supersedeas is not an order of the Circuit Court lawfully brought before this Court for review. It is an order of a Justice of this Court, not sitting as the Circuit Court, but granting the writ under this particular authority of the Statute, as a Judge.

appellate power, as is apparent from the section above quoted.

The only question in reference to supersedeas over which this Court has jurisdiction, is to determine whether or not there is a supersedeas; whether or not there has been a compliance with the Acts of Congress in substance or in form. The Supreme Court in this very cause has determined that the appellants have complied in every respect with the requirements of the law, and that they have a good supersedeas. With that inquiry determined, their jurisdiction over the subject matter of the supersedeas ceased, because there can be nothing else to review as appears on the face of the Statute.

This Court may think that the supersedeas operates harshly, but the Legislature has thought that it provides indemnity in the bond required. This security being given, the Judge was bound to comply with the law. Hence what is there to review? Even if this Court in the exercise of an original power, would not have granted it, they cannot for that reason vacate it through appellate power.

The power to vacate, or suspend or modify the supersedeas cannot be claimed under the following Section, because that provision of law is the very negation of such a claim. We refer to the following provision of the Revised Statutes: Section 716. "POWER TO ISSUE WRITS. The Supreme Court and the Circuit and District Courts shall have power to issue writs of scire facias; they shall also have power to issue all writs not specifically provided for by Statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, and agreeable to the usages and principles of law." It cannot be claimed that it is necessary for the exercise of the juridiction of the Supreme Court over this cause, that the railroad should be sold away. The Supreme Court may and frequently has issued writs of supersedeas in the enforcement and for the exercise of its appellate power, but no one has ever yet before claimed that it could destroy the stay of execution under the above provision. The opinion seems based on the idea that this Court has jurisdiction of the cause and the parties. But what jurisdiction? Only an appellate jurisdiction, limited and confined under the "regulations" of the Statutes.

The language of Section 1007 is peculiarly broad in conferring an absolute right to stay execution upon compliance with its provisons. It reads "But if he desires to stay process on the judgment he may, having served his writ of error, &c." Further on in the same section, "And in such cases where a writ of error may be a supersedeas execution shall not issue until the expiration of ten days." It is the "desire" of the appellant under the act which is to control the question of supersedeas. If he desires to stay process, and complies with the law he has a supersedeas.

In addition the Court below is prohibited from issuing execution for ten days to give him time to express his "desire" to supersede, and to comply with the Statute. It cannot be consistently claimed that while the successful party is stayed for ten days merely by operation of the Statute and without giving any security whatsoever; that after giving such security and complying with the positive direction of the law, he may on the next day be deprived of his supersedeas, either by the Circuit Court or the Appellate Court. Certainly such a construction is contrary to the spirit and language of the legislation of Congress.

There is a further illustration derived from the Statutes against the existence of such a power. Most of the sections of the Revised Statutes which control the questions under consideration relate in terms to writs of error, and it is provided as follows by Section 1012: "APPEALS FROM CIRCUIT COURTS TO SUPREME COURT." Appeals from Circuit Courts and District Courts acting as Circuit Courts and from District Courts in prize cases, shall be subjected to the same rules, regulations and restrictions as are or may be prescribed in law in case of writs of error." We have therefore, the legislation in reference to the superseding of writs of error, provided as the standard to control parties litigant, and thereupon the subsequent section above quoted assimilates proceedings on appeals to those on writs of error. Now, if anything were needed to show more clearly the intent of Congress that the right to a supersedeas should be absolute and unqualified, it is this scheme of legislation on the subject. How could there be any dispensation of a supersedeas lawfully obtained against the execution of a common law judgments. To permit execution in such a case upon mere deposit of money or any other security negatives the whole idea and theory of supersedeas.

The power of this Appellate Court to interfere with the supersedeas cannot be sought in any jurisdiction for the care or preservation of the property or the conversion of the assets. If the property be perishable in its nature, so that it is required to be sold, such a sale of it is a part of the administrative functions of the Court having the custody of it. Undoubtedly the Receivers in this case, acting under the direction of the Circuit Court, or perhaps of this Court, as it may be, may sell any portion of the property pertaining to this railroad, which is perishable in its character, if such a state of things can exist in reference to a property of this nature. Furthermore, the Court having the custody of this property may, in the exercise of its administrative powers, dispose of any portion of its material which it may deem proper and necessary or discreet to dispose of in the cause, and for the purpose of the administration of the Trust estate. But all this must be for the purpose of preserving and administering the estate. It has no reference to any execution of a final decree. It is purely interlocutory process to save the assets from perishing, or to convert them and change their form for objects of utility in the course of administration. That is a very clear and broad destruction which can be easily seen. Such a course of administration of the estate would not and does not require any interference with the supersedeas, or any

The theory of the law in reference to this matter is that a party litigant shall be entitled to hold the res absolved from final process until he can obtain the judgment of this Court upon the merits of the controversy. This result he can attain by giving the full and ample security which the law requires to be given to the appellees. The cause is not fully litigated until a hearing has been had before this Court, and the law proceed upon the presumption of a right to such a hearing under the "regulations prescribed by Congress," for securing the property in controversy, until the decision of the Supreme Court.

The wisdom of this course can clearly be demonstrated. There is no security which can possibly be offered to the appellants in this cause, which can approach, the absolute indemnity of the real estate which is the subject of controversy, and on the security of which they hold their incumbrance. Under the order allowed in this cause a certain amount of money is provided to be deposited.

We insist that is not equal in rank and character to the security of the real estate involved in this litigation. It is possible that the registry of the Circuit Court may not be a safe place of deposit. The money may be stolen; the clerk of the Court may prove a defaulter. If the money be deposited in bank, the bank may fail, or if placed in special deposit the officers of the bank may violate their trust. But no such contingencies can possibly happen to the land grant or the railroad securing these bondholders. That was the security upon which they loaned their money, and it must be apparent from the legislation above quoted that that was the security which the Acts of Congress intended they should be entitled to retain until they had a hearing before this Court. The legislation indicates a system of public policy to offer the fullest protection in the excercise of the appellate rights of litigants in the Federal Courts.

The legislative power has purposely made the right of supersedeas absolute and inflexible. If any other have been to have provided in section 688 or 716 or in any of the other provisioes of the Statutes specially conferring the power to issue various classes of orders upon this Court, that the Supreme Court might vacate or modify a supersedeas upon terms or without terms, as in its discretion it might see fit. But neither in any of the sections, nor in the section providing for the supersedeas, is there the slighstst indication of legislative intent that this right should be other than ex debito Justitiae. On the contrary from the various sections of the Revised Statutes above quoted, it was the apparent intent of Congress to re-assert by legislative declaration the Constitutional provisions that the appellate power of this Court shall be excused only and "specifically" with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

It has been a well honored argument in this Court against the granting of any writ applied for, that the traditions and precedents of the Supreme Court did not furnish any authority for its issuance. We can confidently invoke all the various appeals before this Court in Chancery causes, and the full discussions that have ensued in regard to the exercise of the right of supersedeas, and we think not a single precedent can be found for the exercise of a power, if such there had been, to interfere with the right given by law to supersede the execution of the decree of the subordinate Court.

We refer to the petitions on this hearing to show that no human foresight can provide security for appellants proportioned to the various contingencies dependent on the price obtained on the sale of the railroad and the eventualities of the litigation. Practical experience and the total absence of the exercise of the power herein claimed, coroborates the wisdom of Congress in withholding any grant of power over the right to supersede as secured by its own legislation.

GEORGE HOADLEY,
E. H. GRANDIN,
P. PHILLIPS,
E. L. ANDREWS,

U. S. Supreme Court.

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

AFFIDAVIT IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION TO VACATE ORDER OF DECEMBER 10, 1877.

New York:
Evening Post Steam Presses, 208 Broadway, cor. Fulton Street.

1878.

U. S. Supreme Court. 1

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

No. 879.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, } ss.: 2
Southern District of New York, }

William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, and T. Haskins Dupuy, being duly sworn, depose and say: That at the time of the rendering of the decree from which this appeal is taken, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, namely, on the fifteenth day of June, 1877, these deponents were owners of the first mortgage bonds of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company to the aggregate principal sum of not less than $3,931,000 dollars, with all the unpaid coupons attached thereto; and deponents were also owners of detached coupons of 1874 3 amounting to $535,000, of which many were detached from bonds not held by these deponents.

These deponents further say, that since the taking of this appeal a change in the circumstances of the case and in the situation of the parties, and in the in-

4 terests of these deponents, has taken place, the particulars of such change being as follows: D'Orelli Ziegler, one of the appellants, has assigned, transferred, and delivered bonds held by him, and proved by him before the Master in the Court below, amounting to the principal sum of eighteen thousand dollars, to these deponents; the appellant Bernard DeWatteville has transferred, assigned, and delivered to these deponents all the first mortgage bonds held by him, amounting to the principal sum of one hundred and two thousand dollars; and the said Bernard DeWatteville and D'Orelli Ziegler have no longer any interest adverse to these deponents; and these deponents have caused to 5 be delivered to E. L. Andrews, Esq., who formerly claimed to act as counsel for said Bernard DeWatteville and D'Orelli Ziegler, notices in the following words, namely:

IN THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

No. 879—October Term, 1877.

Morris Ketchum and al.,
Appellants,
6 agt.
William Butler Duncan and al.,
Appellees.

Sir,—This is to give you notice that Bernard de Watteville has assigned, transferred, delivered and made over to William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, and T. Haskins Du Puy, all the evidences of debt issued by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company and claims against said company, heretofore held by him, whether in the shape of bond, coupon, note, judgment, 7 open account, unliquidated demand, unpaid voucher, or otherwise; and you are hereby forbidden to prosecute this appeal any further for him, and you are also hereby forbidden to continue the making of any motion on his behalf to vacate the order made by this court on this appeal on the tenth day of December, 1877; and you are forbidden in any manner to assume to act for or represent him on this appeal or in this litigation.

Dated New York, December 24, 1877.

Yours, &c.,
A. Iselin & Co.,
Agents for Bernard de Watteville. 8

To E. L. Andrews, Esq., Counsellor at Law.

IN THE
SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

No. 879—October Term, 1877.

Morris Ketchum and al.,
Appellants,
agt. 9
William Butler Duncan and al.,
Appellees.

Sir,—This is to give you notice that Bernard de Watteville has assigned, transferred, delivered and made over to us, William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, all the evidences of debt issued by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company and claims against said company, held by said De Watteville, whether in the shape of bond, coupon, note, jugdment, 10 open account, unliquidated demand, unpaid voucher, or otherwise, and said claims and demands are now in our possession; and you are hereby forbidden to continue to prosecute any appeal in respect to said bonds, or to make any motion in respect thereto, or to undertake to represent the said bonds or claims in any manner on this appeal or otherwise.

Dated New York, December 24, 1877.

Yours, etc.,
William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy,
By F. N. Bangs, their attorney.

To E. L. Andrews, Esq., Counsellor at Law.

11 These deponents further say that besides said Ziegler and said DeWatteville, other holders of first mortgage bonds and coupons have since the making of the said decree assigned their claims to these deponents, so that at the time of the making of this affidavit the ownership or proprietorship of these deponents in the first mortgage bonds of the said company has increased from the aggregate sum of $3,931,000 in June, 1877, to the aggregate sum of $5,008,000 on the 31st December, 1877, and the probability and prospect of damage to these deponents arising from the delay in the execution of the decree below has proportionately increased since the taking and allowance of said appeal.

12 These deponents further say that in the suit in which D'Orelli Ziegler and others were originally plaintiffs, mentioned in the papers now on file in this court, an order was made soon after the commencement of that suit for the issue of a commission to a commissioner in the City of New York to take the depositions of Charles Moran, D. Comyn Moran and Amedee D. Moran, parties composing the firm of Moran Brothers of this city, said Moran Brothers having put themselves forward in the litigation in the court below as the attorneys in fact of D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard De Watteville, Henry Jump, Masson Chavannes, Rodolph

Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard; 13 and the bill of complaint of the said Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs having been verified by said Charles Moran as attorney in fact of the said Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs; and the application of the said Eugene Renevier, Rodolph Merian, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard to be made parties to the litigation having been verified by the said Charles Moran as attorney in fact of the said applicants.

And deponents say, that under said commission the depositions of the said Charles Moran, D. Comyn Moran, and Amedee D. Moran were taken and sworn to and returned to, and are on the files of, the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama; 14 that in the course of said depositions, the said three witnesses were examined respecting the extent of the respective interests of the said Jump, Chavannes, Merian, Renevier, Carrard, and Chuffard, as bondholders of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company. The said Charles Moran testified that the said Rodolph Merian was the holder of nine first mortgage bonds of two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively 4,823, 5,792, 2,839, 2,841, 2,844, 3,251, 3,337, 3,519, 3,520; and said Charles Moran further testified, that the said Eugene Renevier was the holder of five first mortgage bonds, of two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively, 15 4,501, 4,502, 4,503, 4,535, and 2,691; and said Charles Moran further testified, that the said Charles Carrard was the owner of twelve first mortgage bonds, of two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively 703 to 705, 3,883 to 3,886, 3,817, 5,916, 1,854, 5,069, and 4,849; and said Charles Moran further testified, that the said Cephise Chuffard was the owner of fourteen first mortgage bonds, of two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively, 953, 1,298, 2,215, 3,491, 4,054, 4,193 to 4,196, 4,514, 4,518, 4,520, 4,640, and 4,894; and these 16 deponents say that there have been transferred, assigned and delivered to these deponents ten of the bonds so sworn to as belonging to the said Cephise Chuffard, namely: Nos. 953, 1298, 2215, 3491, 4054, 4193, 4194, 4195, 4166, 4514, reducing her apparent ownership to four bonds; and said Charles Moran further testified, that Henry Jump was the holder of fourteen first mortgage sterling bonds for two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars, each, numbered respectively, 3,420, 1,471, 4,266, 4,273, 4,473, 4,053, 4,057, 4,575, 4,687, 4,992, 5,073, 5,937, 5,072, and 5,506, and of arrearage interest bonds, three for one thousand dollars each, 17 and four for five hundred dollars each, numbered respectively, 47, 48, 49, 45, 111, 112, and 312. And the said Charles Moran further testified, that Masson Chavannes was the holder of seventeen first mortgage sterling bonds, for two hundred and twenty-five pounds sterling, or one thousand dollars each, numbered respectively, 297½, 3,530, 3,562, 3,047, 5,681, 736, 1,374, 1,444, 1,545, 1,761, 2,684, 2,773, 2,780, 3,321, 4,357, and 5,928., though the last eleven bonds do not appear to have been proved before a Master.

To recapitulate: These deponents say that the principal amount of bonds now outstanding under said first mortgage is $5,609,000, of which these deponents own $5,008,000 dollars, or 89$\frac{28}{100}$ per cent. of the total 18 amount outstanding, while the ownership of the appellants, according to the information of these deponents derived from the sources aforesaid, is as follows: The said Masson Chavannes owns seventeen thousand dollars, or .303 of one per cent. of the total amount; the said Henry Jump owns fourteen thousand dollars, or .249 of one per cent. of the total amount; the said Rudolph Merian owns nine thousand dollars, or .160 of one per cent. of the total amount; the said Charles Carrard owns twelve thousand dollars, or .215 of one per cent. of the total amount; Eugene Renevier owns five thousand dollars, or .088 of one per cent.; and the said Cephise Chuffard owns four thousand dollars, or .071 of one per cent. of the total amount;

or in all the said appellants own sixty-one thousand 19 dollars, or $1\frac{087}{1000}$ per cent. of the principal amount outstanding; so that in case the said decree appealed from should be reversed as to the said coupons of 1874, the gain of the said Masson Chavannes would be $1,360; that of the said Henry Jump would be $1,120; that of the said Rudolph Merrian would be $720; that of the said Eugene Renevier would be $400; that of the said Carrard would be $960; and that of the said
Chuffard would be $320, or $4,880 dollars in all.

These deponents, therefore, say that neither of the said appellants Merian, Renevier, Chuffard, Carrard, Jump and Chavannes has an interest in the matter in controversy to the amount of $5,000, because they say 20 that if the decree below should be reversed as to the coupons of 1874, the additional share of either of said appellants in the proceeds of said sale arising from the reduction of said coupons of 1874, could not, under any possible circumstances, exceed six per cent. upon the par amount of the bonds held by such appellant.

And in reference to the mortgage commonly known as the Tennessee substitution mortgage, which covered one hundred and eighteen miles of the road of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, situated within the State of Tennessee, but did not apply to any other portion of said road, these deponents say that the trustees under said Tennessee substitution mortgage were Richard T. Wilson, Adrian Iselin, and William 21 Butler Duncan; that said trustees were not, as such, made parties defendant to the suit in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, in which William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, as trustees, were plaintiffs, but were made defendants in the two suits in which Morris Ketchum and D'Orelli Ziegler and his associates were respectively plaintiffs; that it is a part of the consolidation order entered on the 5th of June, 1877, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, by consent of all parties, including the said appellants, that the said consolidation

22 order should be and was made without prejudice to and saving, the rights of Richard T. Wilson, Adrian Iselin, and William Butler Duncan, as such trustees; and that the cause should proceed to decree without them, and the cause did by consent proceed to decree without them.

And these deponents further say, that by consent of all parties, further orders were made in said cause, of which copies are as follows:—

At a Stated Term of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, held at the Court House in the City of Mobile, Alabama, 23 on the 6th day of June, 1877.

Present—Hon. Jos. P. Bradley, Associate Justice, and Hon. William B. Woods, Circuit Judge.

D'Orelli Ziegler et al.
vs.
The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company et al.
} In Equity.

24

Richard T. Wilson and Adrian Iselin, as Trustees for the Tennessee Substitution Mortgage bondholders, so called, come into court by their counsel, Robert H. Smith, and move for leave to withdraw the appearance heretofore entered for them, and to vacate, as against them, the order and process to appear, plead, answer or demur; and that they may be stricken from the bill in this cause as parties defendants, on the ground that the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of the State of Tennessee had, before the filing of this bill, taken jurisdiction of the foreclosure of said Tennessee Substitution Mortgage, and still has jurisdiction thereof, and on the 25 ground that being citizens of the State of New York, and the property covered by said mortgage being exclusively within the State of Tennessee, this court has no jurisdiction to foreclose said mortgage or to require said Wilson and Iselin to appear in this cause; and thereupon all the other parties by their respective solicitors and counsel appearing and consenting in open court, it is ordered that said motion be and the same is hereby granted.

(Signed) JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
Circuit Justice.
W. B. WOODS, 26
Circuit Judge.

Filed 6th June, 1877.
(Signed) N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

At a Stated Term of the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Southern District of Alabama, held at the Court House, in the City of Mobile, Alabama, on the 6th day of June, 1877.

Present—Hon. JOSEPH P. BRADLEY, Associate
Justice, and Hon. WILLIAM B. WOODS, 27
Circuit Judge.

MORRIS KETCHUM
vs.
THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, et al.
} In Equity.

Richard T. Wilson and Adrian Iselin, as Trustees for the Tennessee Substitution Mortgage bondholders, so called, come into court by their counsel, Robert H. Smith, and move for leave to withdraw the appearance heretofore entered for them, and to vacate as against 28 them the order and process to appear, plead, answer or demur, and that they may be stricken from the bill in this cause, as parties defendants, on the ground that the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Western District of the State of Tennessee, had, before the filing of this bill, taken jurisdiction of the foreclosure of said Tennessee Substitution Mortgage, and still has jurisdiction thereof; and on the ground that being citizens of the State of New York, and the property covered by said mortgage being exclusively within the State of Tennessee, this court has no jurisdiction to foreclose said mortgage, or to require said Wilson and Iselin to appear in this cause. And, thereupon, all the other 29 parties by their respective solicitors and counsel appearing, and consenting in open court, it is ordered that said motion be, and the same is hereby granted.

(Signed) Joseph P. Bradley,
Circuit Justice.
W. B. Woods,
Circuit Judge.

Filed 6th June, 1877.
(Signed) N. W. Trimble,
Clerk.

And these deponents state the matters and things 30 aforesaid, referring also to the affidavits, petitions and briefs heretofore filed by them, in opposition to the motion made by said Carrard, Chuffard, Jump, Chavannes, Merian and Renevier to vacate the order made on this appeal on December 10, 1877.

W. H. Hays,
Wm. S. Pierson,
T. Haskins DuPuy.

Sworn to before me, this 5th day of January, 1878.
Lucius W. How,
(124) Notary Public,
N. Y. Co.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

Motion for Certiorari.

F. N. BANGS,
For Motion.

NEW YORK:
Evening Post Steam Presses, 208 Broadway, corner of Fulton Street.
1878.

IN THE

Supreme Court 1

OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM—1877.—No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM & AL.,
Appellants,
agst.
WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN & AL., 2
Appellees.

UNIEED STATES OF AMERICA,
Southern District of New York, ss. : } ss. :

William H. Hays, William Butler Duncan and T. Haskins Du Puy, being duly sworn, severally depose and say as follows:

Certain motions have heretofore been made in this court regarding this appeal and the proceedings thereon, and to the papers on said motions and the transcript 3 of the record on the appeal, and to the orders of this court, heretofore made, these deponents respectfully refer.

And these deponents say that they have received from the clerk of this court an index of the matters contained in the transcript of the record on this appeal; and deponents say that the paper purporting

4 to be a transcript of the said record filed with the clerk of this court, is not a full and complete transcript of the record in the court below, but that matters appearing of record in the court below and material to the merits of the appeal have been omitted in the said transcript; and in particular these deponents say that there has been omitted from said transcript a copy of the proofs of claim submitted to the master by Alexander Duncan under the order of March 6, 1876, appearing in said record, and a copy of the proofs of claim or debt submitted to and filed with the master under said order by William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy; and deponents say that as they are advised by their counsel and verily
5 believe, it is material and important to the correct determination of the questions arising on this appeal that the transcript of the record should contain the said proofs of claim.

These deponents further say, that according to the said index, the said transcript of record does not contain a copy of certain proceedings had upon a motion made before his Honor Judge Woods, the Circuit Judge, in the suit in which Morris Ketchum was plaintiff, to remove, or grant an injunction against, the receivers appointed by the court in the suit in which A. Foster Elliot and William Butler Duncan were plaintiffs; and inasmuch as said
6 transcript of record does contain the proceedings before the Circuit Court, Judge Bruce presiding, upon the hearing of certain pleas interposed to said Ketchum's bill, and the opinion of Judge Bruce upon said proceedings, these deponents are advised by their counsel and they verily believe, that it is material to the determination of the questions arising on this appeal that the proceedings on the said motion so heard as aforesaid by Judge Woods, the Circuit Judge, should be transmitted to this Court.

These deponents further say, that there are omitted from said transcript copies of the quarterly reports rendered by the receivers appointed by the court below to take charge of the mortgaged property; and as these deponents are informed and believe the said reports show that at the time of the hearing of the consolidated 7 cause in the court below, the said receivers had in their possession a large sum of money subject to the order of the court, and which, as these deponents contend, should have been disposed of by the decree of the court; and as these deponents are advised by their counsel and believe, it is material to the proper determination of this cause that the last three of the reports filed by the receivers prior to the final hearing of this cause in the court below should be transcribed and transmitted to this court.

And these deponents are further informed by the said index, and they believe, that the said transcript does not contain any copy of the petition of appeal, notice or 8 claim of appeal, allowance of appeal and citation and bond filed with the Clerk of said Circuit Court, upon the appeal of William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy; and that the said transcript does not contain copies of certain depositions made in the suit in which Ziegler and others were plaintiffs, which affidavits were made respectively by Charles Moran, D. Comyn Moran and Amede D. Moran, which depositions were taken under a commission issued in the said action in which Ziegler and others were plaintiffs, and which depositions were read on the final hearing of the consolidated cause in the court below, and which are material to the determination of the questions sought to be raised upon the said appeals. 9

These deponents further say, that on the final hearing of the consolidated cause in the court below, there was filed in open court a stipulation, signed by the solicitors and counsel for William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, consenting that the claim of priority made on behalf of the coupons of 1874 might be allowed, and that as these deponents learn from said index, no copy of the said consent has been transcribed and transmitted to this court, and that as deponents are advised and believe, it is material to the questions sought be raised on this appeal, 10 that the said consent should be before this court upon the hearing of said questions.

Therefore, these deponents pray that a certiorari may issue out of this court and under the seal thereof, directed to the Clerk of the said Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, commanding him to certify to this court copies of the said papers omitted from the said transcript already filed in this court; or that such further or other or different rule or order may be made as may be proper in the premises.

W. H. Hays,
W. Butler Duncan,
T. Haskins Du Puy.

11

Sworn to before me, this 2d day of January, 1878,
Joseph Gutman, Jr.,
United States Commissioner,
Southern District of New York.

IN THE

SUPREME COURT

Of the United States.

October Term, 1877.—No. 879.

12 Morris Ketchum et al.,
Appellants,

agst.

William Butler Duncan et al.,
Appellees.

Gentlemen,—Please to take notice, that upon the affidavit, of which a copy is herewith served upon you, and upon the transcript of the record on file in this court, and upon all the papers on file in this court in the matter of this appeal, a motion will be made before his court at the opening thereof at the Capitol, in the

City of Washington, on the fourteenth day of January, 1878, at the opening of the court on that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, for the issue of a certiorari, as suggested in the affidavit of which a copy is herewith 13 or for such other or differe nature of the case may requir

Dated New York, Decembe

Yours, &c

Francis N. Bangs,
Of counsel for William H. Hays,
William S. Pierson, T. Haskins
Du Puy, William Butler Duncan, Alexander Duncan and 14
Andrew Foster Elliot.

To

E. L. Andrews, Esq.,
Solicitor, and of counsel for
Morris Ketchum et al.

E. H. Grandin, Esq.,
Solicitor, and of counsel for
Rudolph Merian et al.

Supreme Court of the United States,

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

RODOLPH MERIAN et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

ANSWER TO APPELLEES MOTIONS. TO SUSPEND SUPERSEDEAS, TO SET ASIDE ORDERS OF SUPREME COURT REFUSING TO VACATE SUPERSEDEAS OR DISMISS APPEAL, AND FOR A CERTIORARI.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. H. GRANDIN,
E. L. ANDREWS,
Of Counsel for Appellants.

Morrison & Nathan,
Printers and Blank Book Manufacturers,
23 Dey Street, N. Y.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN, ET AL.,
Appellees.

RODOLPH MERIAN ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

Now come the appellants in the foregoing causes in this Court and respectfully move this Honorable Court to advance the said causes on the calendar of this Court, and assign a day for the speedy hearing of the said appeals on their merits, and for grounds of said motion, the appellants refer to the Brief herewith presented.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. L. ANDREWS,
E. H. GRANDIN,
of Counsel.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appts.,
vs.
WM. B. DUNCAN ET AL.

On motion of Mr. E. L. Andrews, it is ordered that the motion to vacate the order heretofore entered, suspending operation of the supersedeas in this cause be assigned for argument on the 15th of January, 1878.

17 December, 1877.

True copy :

Test.,

D. W. MIDDLETON,
Clk. Sup. Court, U. S.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

RODOLPH MERIAN ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

ANSWER TO MOTIONS.

To suspend Supersedeas. To set aside order of Supreme Court refusing to vacate supersedeas or dismiss appeal. And for a Certiorari.

To the Honorable the Supreme Court of the United States:

Come, Charles Moran, D. Comyn Moran and Amedee D. Moran, who being duly sworn, deposes and says, each for himself, that they constitute the firm of Moran Bros., of the city of New York, and are the owners and holders of one hundred and forty-two thousand dollars ($142,000) of the First Mortgage and interest bonds of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, of which one hundred and five thousand are First Mortgage Sterling Bonds.

Charles Moran says that he has been interested in the Mobile and Ohio railroad enterprise for many years past, in fact since 1855, and was engaged in the negotiation of the loan for six millions of dollars ($6,000,000) of which the bonds above referred to constitute a part, and a first mortgage on the property.

Deponents say that, relying upon the representations of William B. Duncan, as hereinafter set forth, and at his instance, they, together with some small bondholders requested him to take possession of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad as trustee for the bondholders under said mortgage, and upon the default which occurred in the payment of interest on the first day of May, 1875. That request made by them as cestius que trusts was in writing, and has been used in the course of this litigation, as the basis for the action of said Duncan in taking possession of the railroad.

Charles Moran says, that for several years past, and as soon as he learned that there were bonds in existence issued by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, and claiming to hold a paramount lien upon the road in the State of Tennessee; he stated in Geneva and in New York and whenever the opportunity offered that he could not submit to the injury to his rights attempted by the imposition of this lien of some one million six hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars ($1,668,000,) ahead of the first mortgage.

He further says, that he, frequently, in conversations with W. B. Duncan, before, and about the time of the said request, and since that time reiterated his intention to defend himself against these Tennessee claims. He was assured by Duncan, that he would do nothing to affect his position in respect of said claims. Under these circumstances, and believing from Duncan's assurances that he would assert the rights of the First Mortgage bondholders throughout the litigation; deponent appeared as his sponsor as aforesaid, for the control of the property. At that time, also, the said Duncan and his firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co., were of good repute and supposed to be solvent.

Deponents say, that some months thereafter Morris Ketchum filed his bill as trustee of the First Mortgage. The said Duncan concealed the facts as to the manner in which he claimed to derive his title as trustee of the first mortgage, and alleged that Ketchum's proceedings were not brought in good faith, but merely for the purpose of making his commissions as trustee, and induced deponent to oppose his (Duncan's) removal from the possession of the railroad.

Thereafter, on or about the 20th day of May, 1876, deponents were surprised to learn for the first time, from the newspapers, that a decree had been entered for the sale of the railroad in Tennessee, at the suit of William B. Duncan, Adrian Iselin, and Richard T. Wilson, claiming as trustees of the Tennessee substitution bonds. Deponents thereupon made inquiry into the condition of the litigation, and learned that Morris Ketchum in discharge of his duty, as trustee of the First Mortgage bondholders, had filed proceedings against the claims of these Tennessee substitution bondholders and thereby deponents were led to make further and closer investigation into the affairs of the trust estate and for the first time became apprised of the true condition of their property. They learned the following facts: The bill which had been filed in Alabama by Duncan and his associate, in the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co., A. F. Elliott had been framed on behalf of the coupons, 1874, held by Alexander Duncan, setting them up as liens on the property under the First Mortgage; and acknowledging the one million six hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars ($1,668,000) of Tennessee claims to be paramount to the First Mortgage on that section of the road. In fact, deponents had been unwittingly made the means, by Duncan, of setting up through him, the very positions which they had desired to defend themselves against. Deponents further learned for the first time, that the manner in which Duncan claimed to have acquired the title to the trusteeship was by virtue of a proceeding instituted in Mobile in 1863, and a publication in a newspaper of that city, followed by a decree of a Southern Court in the following terms: "The Court being satisfied that the said Ketchum is an alien enemy, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that he be removed from the said trusteeship." Deponents not believing that a decree obtained during the war, and on a political ground, could confer a valid title against a loyal citizen, became fearful that the affairs of the property would be involved in confusion and perpetual discredit by reason of this false basis of title be set up against their securities.

Deponents further discovered that Duncan had not opposed the misappropriation of two hundred and thirty thousand dollars ($230,000) of the moneys of the trust in his hands to floating claimants, and that said payment of the moneys derived from the earnings of the road to inferior claimants had been opposed by Morris Ketchum alone, acting in the name of Louis J. Belloni, one of the First Mortgage bondholders. Mr. Ketchum was unable to act in his own name, as trustee, to prevent this appropriation of the funds of the trust, by reason of a decision which had just been rendered by Judge Woods, holding the Confederate proceedings aforesaid to be valid. In confirmation of the above, deponents refer to the reports of this litigation in the second volume of Woods reports, and to the records in this Court.

Deponents further found that the father of W. B. Duncan, Alexander Duncan, claimed to own about two hundred thousand dollars ($200,000) of the coupons of the Tennessee substitution bonds assigned to him by Duncan, Sherman & Co., and that W. B. Duncan, was, in fact, through his assignee in bankruptcy, interested in some of the above floating claims, and through him and Alexander Duncan interested in every claim adverse to the rights of those whom he claimed to be trustee.

Deponents say that at the said times in 1876 they represented $512,000 of First Mortgage and interest bonds of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, their constituents residing in most instances in Europe, and relying upon them for their protection. Deponents believing it to be their duty on behalf of those for whom they were acting as agents, as well as necessary for the protection of their own interests, to interpose some defence against the acts of Duncan, conferred with some of the largest holders of First Mortgage bonds in the city of New York, and agreed upon the plan of defence and action set forth in the following statement to the bondholders which forms a part of the record in this Court:

Office of Mortgage Bondholders of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Co.
November 24, 1876.

To the creditors of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company:

The undersigned, owners of First Mortgage Sterling Bonds of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company have duly considered a circular signed by Messrs. William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, and T. Haskins Dupuy, accompanying a Plan of Reorganization of said company which has been submitted to us for our signatures.

The object of this plan can only be, it appears to us, to further the interests of the inferior securities of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, at the expense of the First and other Mortgage Bondholders. After a careful examination we believe it to be most unjust to our interests as holders of those bonds, and we respectfully call the attention of all the parties in interest, to the following simple statement of facts, and the conclusions drawn from them by us. The facts are mostly taken from the records of the Court having the present custody of the property of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, and hence cannot be denied.

Messrs. William B. Duncan and A. F. Elliott have been for several years directors of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company. The former was the head of the banking house of Duncan, Sherman & Co., of this city, and the latter the New Orleans agent of that house. For about a year before the default of the Mobile and Ohio R. R. Company on the interest of the First Mortgage Bonds, Mr. Duncan had been president of the company, and still acts as such president.

In April, 1875, shortly before the default in the payment of interest, Messrs. Duncan and Elliott claimed to become trustees of the First Sterling Mortgage, Mr. Duncan, at the time, being already a trustee of the so-called Tennessee Substitution Bonds, and likewise for the consolidated Mortgage Bonds. Immediately upon the default, which transpired in May, 1875, the directors surrendered possession of the entire property of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company to Duncan and Elliott, as trustees for the First Mortgage Bondholders. A few days afterwards, Duncan and Elliott filed a bill in the United States Circuit Court for Alabama, and were invested by said Court with the powers of receivers of the property. Since that time Duncan and Elliott have administered the property through the agency of T. Haskins Dupuy.

The Floating Debt Claims.

On or about the 9th day of April, 1876, the Floating Debt Creditors of the company applied to the United States Court for the sale of $550,000 (five hundred and fifty thousand dollars), of securities, belonging to the First Mortgage, and the application of the proceeds in liquidation of their claims.

W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliott claiming te represent the First Mortgage Bondholders offered absolutely no opposition to this demand.

The sole defence of the First Mortgage Bondholders was made on behalf of Mr. Morris Ketchum, as surviving trustee of their mortgage aided by some of the bondholders. Without this timely action on the part of Mr.

Ketchum, it is clear that the Court would have been led to grant the order in favor of the Floating Debt Claimants, which would in effect, have appropriated our property for the benefit of other persons. Indeed, the lack of all opposition on the part of the First Mortgage Bondholders-other than above stated, was urged on the Court as an acquisence by the bondholders generally, in this appropriation of their property. Fortunately, however, the scheme was entirely defeated and the United States Circuit Judge sustained Mr. Ketchum in his opposition on our behalf.

The assets, amounting to more than half a million dollars of securities, thus saved for our benefit, we should seek to have applied to the payment of our over due coupons. The strange proceeding of the Floating Debtholders, and the absence of all defence on our behalf by W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliott, warn us of the necessity of a proper representation of the First Mortgage Bondholders.

Alexander Duncan's claims.

In their proceedings by bill filed in the United States Circuit Court, Messrs. Duncan and Elliot declare that the coupons of the First Mortgage Bonds which fell due in May and November of 1874, which had been paid to the bondholders, were still outstandieg and subsisting First Mortgage liens on our property. These coupons were presented and were paid in the same manner in which all previous coupons had been presented and paid. It was generally supposed, and every one had a right to suppose, when they were paid and surrendered, that they ceased to be a part of the First Mortgage. Nevertheless, it was claimed about the time of the default in 1875, that these coupons were outstanding liens on the property, and they now reappear mainly in the hands of Mr. Alexander Duncan, father of Mr. William B. Duncan who claims them by assignment from Duncan, Sherman & Co., to the extent of nearly ($736,000) seven hundred and thirty-six thousand dollars. It is claimed that these coupons should participate in our mortgage, and to the same extent, reduce the value of our bonds. These coupons were paid in the regular and usual way, and they should not be paid again, at least with our consent. Dead and paid coupons cannot be revived in this way to eat up the mortgaged property. If this should be submitted to, the payment of mortgage interest can always be turned into a loan to the bondholder, to be deducted from the amount of this mortgage. We cannot consent to any plan of reorganization which proposes to take this three-quarters of a million dollars from the mortgage estate, as does the plan offered under date of October 12th, 1876, which purposes to include all coupons "whose original due date named therein shall not be later than November 1, 1877."

The Tennessee Claims.

In the various proceedings before the United States Circuit Courts, W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliott admit that certain claims called Tennessee Substitution Bonds hold a priority over the First Mortgage Sterling Bonds on the 118 miles of the main line running through the State of Tennessee. In addition, a distinct suit in the States Circuit Court of Tennessee was instituted in the name of William B. Duncan, Adrian Iselin and R. T. Wilson, as trustees for these Tennessee Substitution Bonds, to enforce in their favor a priority over the First Mortgage Bonds. The sole representatives of the First Mortgage Bonds served with notice of these legal proceeding in Tennessee, were Duncan and Elliott, who claimed to represent the First Mortgage Bonds as trustees. No defence, whatever, was made by them in this action, and the consequence was that a decree was obtained, by default, against the First Mortgage, and an order of sale of the Tennessee section of the road, was entered for the benefit of the Tenneesee Substitution Bonds, leaving the First Mortgage Bonds only such balance, if any, as might remain. The excuses offered by W. B. Duncan to palliate his conduct in this matter, and his efforts to avoid the effect of his laches cannot countervail his express admissions in favor of these subordinate claims against the First Mortgage.

Now, in fact, the First Mortgage is a first lien on the entire line, the lien formerly created to protect the advances made by the State of Tennessee to the company, having long since been satisfied by the return to the State of its Bonds to the full amount of the advances made by the State. It is true, there was an attempt to assign the State's lien, after its liquidation, to the holders of the Tennessee Substitution Bonds; but as these bonds were created long after the First Mortgage Bonds, and were issued only after the full liquidation of the advances of the State, and as they are entirely different in nature from the cancelled State Bonds, these new Substitution Bonds cannot obtain a priority over the First Mortgage Bonds, by any arrangement between the company and its subsequent creditors.

But even assuming that the Substitution Bonds are entitled to the benefit of the satisfied and extinct lien of the State of Tennessee, the proposed plan of reorganization gives them an advantage over the First Mortgage Bonds, entirely unwarranted and unjust: The First Mortgage Bonds are for £225 Sterling each, payable in London, equal to $1100 Gold or $1200 currency. These Bonds are proposed to be admitted into the reorganization only for the sum of $1000, and they are allotted only $440 in the New First Mortgage Bonds for each Sterling Bond; whilst the Tennessee Substitution Bonds, which cannot claim more than $1000 currency under the State lien, are allotted $625 for each $1000 bond. And the past due coupons of these bonds are admitted into the proposed reorganization at $36 each, although only entitled to claim under the State lien $30 in currency.

In fact these various proceedings are simply attempts to give an unjust priority over the paramount rights of the First Mortgage Bonds to the following claims :

Floating Claims	$ 536,000
Alexander Duncan's Claims..............	636,000
Tennessee Claims........................	2,018,028
Total loss to Mortgage Bondholders......	$2,290,028

Those who favor or passively submit to the priority of these various claims over the First Mortgage Bonds, appeal to the current, well-founded objection against litigation in the Courts. But, if litigation continues, on whom shall the blame fall ? on those who defend their just rights, or on those who attempt to secure an undue and unjust advantage over prior liens ? In all events, we shall, henceforward, take good care that the property and assets are fairly managed and applied for the benefit of the parties entitled to them.

In our judgment the property should be promptly taken out of the Courts and placed under the direct administration of the Mortgage Bondholders and their representatives ; and we sincerely believe that an effort by the Bondholders to protect themselves against the foregoing claims, and to reorganize the property in their own interest, while treating all the various other interests with the utmost liberality, will meet with the same success that attended the resistance to the priority over the Mortgage Bonds, sought to be obtained by the Floating Creditors.

In case of the sale of the road on foreclosure it would probably not bring the amount of the First Mortgage. It therefore rests entirely with the First Mortgage Bondholders to determine the conditions on which they will admit the junior securities to participate in the purchase.

We suggest and recommend to our fellow-Bondholders, and to all other parties in interest, to unite with us, in order to effect

The Reorganization of the M. & O. R. R. Co. on the following terms, which appear to us equally just to all the various parties in interest:

I. Obtain from the Court an order for the application to the payment of our overdue coupons, of the assets which it was lately attempted to apply to the payment of the Floating Debt Creditors.

II. Release the property from the hands of the Court by the sale of the entire line, from Mobile, Alabama, to Columbus, Kentucky. At such sale the property to be purchased for the benefit of all the securities of the present company—and the purchasers to reorganize the company in accordance with this plan.

III. The reorganized company to create and issue new securities, as follows:

(a). Six per cent. Bonds, payable, principal and interest, in gold, secured by a first mortgage on the entire line from Columbus, Kentucky, to Mobile, Alabama, and on all the property, rights, franchises and lands acquired by purchase for account of the reorganized company; said Bonds to be issued in exchange for the First Mortgage Sterling Bonds, and for the Interest Bonds, and for the unpaid coupons on those bonds, which matured on and after the first of May, 1875. We propose to admit the Interest Bonds on the same basis with the First Mortgage Bonds, because the old First Mortgage coupons are held in trust for the benefit of the holders of the present Interest Bonds.

(b). First preferred Income Bonds, bearing seven per cent. interest, non-cumulative, and payable only when earned, to be issued in exchange for the present Second Mortgage Bonds, and for unpaid coupons to March 1, 1878.

(c). Second preferred Income Bonds, bearing seven per cent. interest, non-cumulative, and payable only when earned, to be issued in exchange for the present convertible Bonds and upaid coupons, to March 1, 1878.

(d). Third preferred Income Bonds, bearing seven per cent. interest, non-cumulative, and payable only when earned, to be issued in exchange for the Tennessee Substitution Bonds and unpaid coupons, to January 1, 1878.

(e). Fourth preferred Income Bonds, bearing seven per cent. interest, non-cumulative, and payable only when earned, to be issued in exchange for the Consolidated Bonds.

(f). Surplus Income Bonds, bearing seven per cent. interest, non-cumulative, and payable only when earned, to be issued in settlement of Floating Debt.

Common Stock,

To be issued to the amount of the present Common Stock, but to be held and voted on by the trustees of the New First Mortgage until interest on all the above Bonds has been paid out of net earnings for three successive years. Thereupon, the certificates to be assigned to the present stockholders or their representatives.

We are satisfied that the property is amply able to meet the amount of First Mortgage interest called for by the above plan, and that the charter rights will be unimpaired by a sale for our benefit.

The holders of all the securities other than the First Mortgage who do not accede to this plan within a time to be limited by the Purchasing Committee, will be debarred from participating in the purchase and reorganization.

In order to consummate the above plan of reorganization without unnecessary delay, we request all the creditors of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company to return signed the accompanying power, addressed to Committee of Mobile and Ohio Railroad Bondholders.

68 William street, New York.

MORAN BROTHERS,
H. AMY & CO.,
ARENTS & YOUNG,
LOUIS J. BELLONI.

The undersigned holders of securities of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, now revoking all other powers, do hereby request and authorize

Moran Brothers, H. Amy & Co., Arents & Young,
Louis J. Belloni,

to act on our behalf in the election of a Purchasing Committee, composed of two First Mortgage Bondholders and one Second Mortgage Bondholder, who shall have the preceding plan carried into execution by final decrees of the Circuit Courts of the United States, and by purchase and reorganization thereunder; and who shall take any and all proceedings deemed by them advisable in furtherance of said plan, which shall not be effectual until approved by a majority of the First Mortgage Bondholders. After the reorganization on the foregoing basis, the possession of the road to be delivered to the directors who may be selected by a vote of the First Mortgage Bondholders controlling the stock of the company under the foregoing plan.

Names and address	Classes of claims	Amount.

N. B.—The Bondholders and other parties in interest may send this power to the signers of the above plan, or to any other person they may desire to entrust with their interests.

Deponents say that the signers of the foregoing circular owned and represented the sum of $930,000 of the First Mortgage bonds.

About this time, Morris Ketchum had issued the following circular, Judge Woods having upheld the Confederate Decree:

24 Broad Street.
New York, April 19th, 1876.

Dear Sir:

A large number of interested parties, yourself among the number, have either called upon, or communicated with me in relation to the affairs of the Mobile and Ohio R. R.

These parties have thus learned that I was the only survivor of the three original Trustees under the First Mortgage, and at the request of sundry holders of First Mortgage Bonds, I had taken steps, in their behalf, to assert my right to the position of Trustee at the present time, in spite of my pretended removal by the Courts of the State of Alabama, after the commencement of the war of the Rebellion.

After hearing argument upon the question, Judge Woods has decided, upon purely legal and technical points, that my removal must be held valid, as well as the appointment of the present encumbents of the Trust.

I have felt it my duty to advise you of these facts, inasmuch as, whatever may be my opinion as to the existing administration of the affairs of this Road, the decision above quoted necessarily ends my connection with it.

Many of you have expressed great dissatisfaction at the past and present treatment of your interests and property. My right to defend you is denied. The remedies remain in your own hands.

MORRIS KETCHUM.

But the signers of the aforesaid circular united in requesting Morris Ketchum to continue the efforts which he had made for the protection of the First Mortgage bondholders as their trustee, and united with him in all the subsequent proceedings which have been had from that time to the present. Deponents say that among the first steps which transpired in the litigatton after the foregoing, was the hearing had before the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama, upon the plea of the Railroad Company, and the demurrer of William B. Duncan contesting the title of Morris Ketchum to the trusteeship of the railroad, upon the ground that during the war a Southern Court had divested his title.

After a hearing which extended over nearly an entire week, and after long deliberation, his Honor Judge Bunce pronouncing the opinon of the Circuit Court at its regular term overruled the defences which had been set up to sustain the Confederate proceedings above described. Morris Ketchum thereupon moved the Court to fill the vacancies in his trust by the appointment of George S. Coe and Philo C. Calhoun, two of the leading bank presidents of the city of New York, and also moved that the possession which then existed and which still exists under the aforesaid Confederate title be changed by the appointment of receivers, under the title which had been sanctioned by the Court. The said motions came up in due form upon their return day before the Circuit Court, but for reasons assigned in open Court by the learned Judge holding the Court, but not deemed discreet to mention here, a hearing could not be had. Soon afterwards the Term of the Circuit Court was adjourned sine die, and the said motions have never had a hearing, and the said Duncan and Elliott have still remained and now remain the possessors of the property.

Deponents say that said Duncan and his counsel, by petition presented to the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Tennessee, alleged that "the decree in favor of the substitution bonds, and against the First Mortgage bonds was taken without their knowledge," and that "the complainants were not entitled to a sale of the property unless default be made in the payment of the principal debt which does not mature until the year 1901, but so long only as default in payment of interest exists, their right is to the application of the income of the property by the agency of a receiver."

Deponents further say, that they filed a bill to review said decree, but finally it was arranged between Duncan and Iselin et. al., that a hearing might be had in regard to the merits of the questions involved in the Tennessee suit, but refusing to admit the present appellants, or Mr. Ketchum, as parties, so that they might appeal.

Deponents, as agents for Rodolph Merian and other bondholders to the amount of six hundred thousand dollars ($600,000), thereupon presented a petition to the Circuit Court for the Western District of Tennessee, for an order that the opening of the decree might be substantial and not illusory by admitting the said bondholders as defendants to the bill to protect their own rights; Mr. Elliott, one of the claimants to the trusteeship of the First Mortgage under the confederate title claiming to be their sole representative before the Tennessee Circuit Court, and he being a former associate in the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co., with Duncan, who was largely interested in the Tennessee claims. Morris Ketcham likewise presented a petition to the same Court for leave to be admitted as a defendant as the trustee of the First Mortgage. Both of these motions were opposed for several days by counsel for Duncan and Elliott, and were both finally denied by Mr. Justice Trigg. Deponents then prepared by their counsel to seek some remedy whereby they might have a position on the record which would enable them to avoid any further pro confessos against their mortgage, and ultimately to have a hearing before the Supreme Court of the United States. The other parties to the litigation at last consented that Rodolph Merian and others might be made parties, but upon condition that they would go to trial on such facts as could be agreed upon.

Deponents are informed by their counsel and verily believe that to avoid troublesome and expensive litigation against any decree which might be obtained without their presence as parties, they felt bound to permit the cause to be presented to the Circuit Court upon a very imperfect condition of the record, to which they consented under duress as aforesaid. Merian and others were then constituted parties on behalf of six hundred thousand dollars ($600,000), of the First Mortgage Bonds as appears from the record, and the cause proceeded to a hearing. The opinion pronounced in the cause reads in part as follows: "I have given to this case all the consideration that I have been able to devote to it during the vacation. I have necessarily been absent from home for a large portion of my time, and while here have been occupied in the examination and disposition of an unusual amount of business at Chambers, and even now, to dispose of unfinished business, I will be compelled to leave very soon for Knoxville and Nashville, and having some matters of private concern which must engage my attention before taking my departure to fill other engagements, I shall be obliged to postpone writing an elaborate opinion, as I contemplated doing, at this time, and such as the magnitude and importance of the case would seem to demand. I regret this exceedingly, but under all the circumstances I find it impracticable now, and trust to having leisure and opportunity at some future time for doing so, if it should be particularly desired."

Deponents further say, that pending the proceedings at Circuit, which resulted in the decrees below, the holders of the Tennessee claims and the Duncan coupons, confederating with T. H. Dupuy, who was the agent of Duncan and Elliott, in the possession of the property, together with said Duncan and Elliott, and wielding all the influence and prestige derived from the possession of the railroad which had been retained by them in the manner above indicated, combined together and proposed what they were pleased to call a plan of re-adjustment of the securities of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company.

They represented by notices in the public press, and by circulars distributed, that the plan proposed by them would terminate expensive litigation, and that the adoption of the plan above set forth, presented by Moran, Amy and others, would lead to an opposite result. The manner in which a number of bona fide First Mortgage Bondholders were brought into this scheme is shown by the papers already submitted to this Court, in which it appears that the cestui que trusts were threatened and induced to believe that by a privilege accorded of using the bonds as cash upon the sale of the property, the party holding the largest number of claims would be enabled to deprive cestui que trusts of their just and contract rights. Among these representations were the following:

To the Bondholders of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

The agreement of October 1, 1876, having been signed by a majority of the first mortgage indebtedness and Tennessee sub-bondholders, has become binding on the subscribers thereto.

Any other plan of reorganization predicated upon obtaining the consent of the majority of the first mortgage indebtedness holders has now become impracticable, and it is, therefore, the interest of the yet outstanding bondholders to join the party which will have the best chance to purchase the road whenever a decree for its sale will have been obtained.

We hereby give notice that bonds can be deposited under this agreement up to the 1st of March next; all bondholders who have not acceded to it by that time will, at the discretion of the Committee, and without further notice, be liable to be debarred from participating in it.

WILLIAM H. HAYS,
WILLIAM S. PIERSON, } Committee.
T. HASKINS DUPUY.

They have likewise used the decree appealed from as a means of forcing submissions from the bondholders by advertising it as follows in the daily newspapers:

Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

[Extract from the final decree rendered June 15, 1877, in the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama. Present—Hon. Jos. P. Bradley, Circuit Justice; Hon. W. B. Woods, Circuit Judge]:

"7. The Court orders and decrees that the Masters may receive in payment from the highest and last bidder, bonds and coupons which form a part of the first mortgage debt ascertained to be due or owing by the Master in his report, and sustained by the opinion of this Court. * * * provided also that if the said mortgage property shall be bid off directly or indirectly by, for or in behalf of the bondholders and creditors who have or shall have entered into and subscribed the agreement for the readjustment of the securities of said company, dated October 1, 1876, commonly called the agreement of reorganization, then and in that case all and every bondholder and creditor of said company not having already entered into and subscribed said agreement, who shall, on or before the first day of September next, enter into and subscribe the same, and deposit their securities with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in the city of New York, or with the Bank of Mobile, in the city of Mobile, as provided by said agreement, shall be and they are hereby allowed to participate in said bid and purchase on the same terms and on an equal footing in all respects, according to the character of their claims respectively, with the said bondholders and creditors who have heretofore entered into and signed the said agreement."

Further information may be had on application personally or by mail to

W. H. HAYS, Chairman,
No. 11 Pine Street, New York.

The following declares their expectation of advantage from a change in the mortgage contract so as to permit the road to be sold for bonds.

NEW YORK, Feb. 16, 1877.

To the creditors of the Mobile and Ohio Ralroad Co.:

The Committee of Reorganization of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company take occasion to inform you as follows:

* * * * * *

8. The Committee has in its actual possession claims enough to enable it to buy the property whenever it is offered for sale, in a manner which will require it to raise less money than will be required from any other purchaser.

(Confidential.) Office of Committee of Reorganization of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company,
No. 11 Pine street, N. Y.
March 10th, 1877.

It is very satisfactory to the committee to be able to refer you to the annexed schedule showing the amount of bonds now in the hands of the committee and subscribed to the reorganization scheme. This large and prepondering amount insures, as far as anything can, the ability of the committee to purchase the entire property; because under the circumstances any decree of foreclosure will of course permit payment to be made by the purchaser in the securities of the road, according to their order and priority, and the purchase will be made for the exclusive benefit of the subscribers to the agreement who shall have transferred their securities to the committee.

The number and amount of those who have as yet withheld their assent to the scheme is so small in proportion to the whole amount of bonds outstanding that the committee anticipate no difficulty, with the means at their command, in providing the small amount which may be necessary to be paid into Court for division among such dissenting minority, and the new securities to be issued the reorganization scheme, will afford an ample fund for the benefit of the new corporation, and of the subscribers to the agreement.

We think you should urge upon those who have not subscribed the agreement, as well as those who have done so, but have not as yet deposited their securities, (and who are not included in the annexed schedule), the importance of their so doing, as tending very greatly to the promotion of their own interests, and to rendering possible the consummation of even the first object of the committee, as the fact that we are prepared to produce to the Court the bonds which we claim to represent has a valuable effect; and to participate in the benefit of the scheme the bonds must be under our actual control.

For the committee,

W. H. HAYS.

Deponents show that the arrangement above set forth was predicated upon an agreement with the corporation, and so far as it expected to realize an amicable arrangement by which the First Mortgage Bondholders should accept a new bond of similar rank for only four hundred and forty dollars ($440) in lieu of each bonds now held by them for a thousand ($1000) dollars, and relinquish the balance of their First Mortgage to the Duncan coupons and the Tennessee substitution claims it has utterly failed of success.

Your petitioners show that when this cause was heard at Circuit, there were more than one million three hundred thousand dollars, ($1,300,000) of First Mortgage and Second Mortgage Bonds, including only three hundred thousand of the latter, who were united in opposing this effort to deprive them of their rights. There were more than one and a half million of First Mortgage Bonds besides many hundred of thousands of dollars of Second Mortgage Bonds, which refused to yield the sacrifices proposed, and which it was sought to entort from the bondholders by the power of bidding, This scheme, too, had been put forward by the very agent who was in possession of the railroad and retained in that possession by virtue of the remarkable circumstances which transpired in relation thereto, at Circuit. Deponents submit, as shown in the papers presented to this Court, that the effect of the decree in reference to the purchase of this property, and which provision of the decree was extensively advertised by the said Dupuy and others in this scheme, to get control of the property, induced a large number of First Mortgage Bondholders to yield their mortgage rights to their own agent, combined with Pierson and Hays, so that the amount of First Mortgage Bonds which still refuse to yield to the claims of the Duncan coupons and Tennessee substitution bonds is about three-quarters of a million of dollars.

Deponents believe that they own more of the First Mortgage Bonds than Duncan, Elliott, Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy altogether.

Deponents now represent two hundred and twenty-nine thousand dollars ($229,000) of said bonds, includtheir own, and the record shows that of the balance of First Mortgage Bonds, H. Amy and Company representing and owning about a quarter of a million, are awaiting the decision of this Court upon the merits of the cause, to determine whether they will revoke their power given to Dupuy and others to bid for them on the sale of the property.

Besides these, of the four hundered thousand dollars ($400,000) of bonds not specially represented on the record, and represented only by Morris Ketcham, as trustee, deponent's are informed that about two hundred thousand dollars ($200,000) have expressed their determination to await the judgment of this Court. There are likewise two hundred and twenty thousand dollars ($220,000) of Second Mortgage Bonds, that have presented their petition to this Court in conjunction with the appellants.

And deponents further say that they prefer to obtain an adjudication from this Court as to the validity of the liens on which they invested their money instead of voluntarily surrendering fifty-six per cent. (56 per cent.) of that lien for the benefit of the contesting claimants. They would lose fifty-six per cent. (56 per cent.) of their mortgage lien for two hundred and twenty-nine thousand dollars ($229,000), to wit: One hundred and twenty-eight thousand dollars by making such voluntary surrender. The bonds represented by Mr. Ketcham would, by such voluntary surrender, lose more than two hundred thousand dollars ($200,000). The appellants believing that they were entitled to the fullest adjudication in the premises, have given bonds for one hundred and twenty thousand dollars ($120,000) to stay the execution of the decree below and the sale of the railroad. They have offered to submit these appeals, though the decree below were against them, upon printed arguments, but the appellees have not consented to this fair and reasonable proposition. Deponents now pray this Court that the causes may be advanced on the calendar for a speedy hearing, as on account of the reasons shown in the accompanying papers, any interference with the supersedeas obtained would be a practical nullification of their appeal. A large number of the First Mortgage Bonds are held by parties who hold contested claims, Tennessee substitution bonds and Duncan coupons. Deponents have been informed by a number of First Mortgage Bondholders who have yielded to the propositions of Dupuy and others, that they did so supposing that they would lose the greater part of their bonds if they did not accede, and that they trusted deponents would prosecute the appeals to a successful determination.

The following extract from a late letter of one of deponent's constituents in Switzerland, illustrates this: "The last few days they have used a most persistent solicitation to bring us on their side; they have given us as a last argument that unless our bonds were deposited with the Hays Committee they will only have the right at the termination of the litigation to a very small dividend." Since the order of this Court suspending the supersedeas, deponents received a cable despatch from De Watteville to surrender his bonds to the Dupuy party.

Deponents are desirous of expediting the determination of their rights, but their interests are too large to justify the concessions asked of them, and they can only further, as far as in them lies, the immediate and prompt hearing of the merits of the litigation.

Deponents further refer to the fact of the continued possession of the railroad by Duncan and, Elliott and the very large expenditure made by them, exceeding one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000) for legal expenses, and the fact that appellants have been subjected already to an expense of more than twelve thousand dollars ($12,000) for the defence of their rights without any allowance from the fund, even for actual disbursements, to the trustee named in the deed, although his title has been confirmed by the Circuit Court.

Deponents and the other parties to the First Mortgage Bondholders' agreement, above set forth, have thus been placed in the position of seeing the trust estate wielded throughout this litigation by parties in interest in the contested claim.

Deponents further say, that from statements made to them by some of the of the bondholders who have joined the Dupuy plan, they are informed, that they have been induced to join the same from the fact, that Duncan and Elliott are retained in the possession of the property. The said Duncan is an adjudicated bankrupt and Elliott has made an assignment in solvency as a member of Duncan, Sherman & Co. Their bondsmen are two attorneys at law, who are likewise on the bond of the assignee in insolvency of Duncan, Sherman & Co. to the extent of six hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Under these circumstances, deponents have deemed it useless to object to their accounts with such a remote prospect of recovering from insolvents.

Deponents are assured and believe that the most considerable number of bona fide First Mortgage bondholders have not yielded their rights willingly, but from the fear of litigation held out to them by the Hays-Dupuy party, and also from the fear of losing the greater part of their bonds by the process of bidding above described.

Deponents submit that they and their constituents have been greatly oppressed by this course of action in regard to the possession of the property. This has been intensified by the fact that after a year of litigation to determine that the confederate title of Duncan & Elliott was invalid, they are still continued as trustees in possession under that title.

Deponents have only desired throughout the litigation that the property should be in impartial hands and that this grievous wrong should not accrue to them, namely witnessing the hand of the Court directed by agencies adverse to them, and their opponents gaining the advantage of wielding against them the property, in which they had a large interest.

Deponents submit the foregoing to show that the appellees are not entitled to the extraordinary grace and favor asked by them, namely, to have the supersedeas practically destroyed, to enable them to continue in permanent control of the property, And deponents refer to the brief herewith submitted to show the great loss which will accrue to them from the execution of the present decree.

And deponents submit that no proof whatever has been presented to this Court of any anxiety or desire on the part of the First Mortgage Bondholders for this proposed hasty and immediate sale of the property before a hearing in this Court. On the contrary, from the evidence submitted on the motions already argued it is shown that there is a strong desire among the bondholders who have deemed themselves obliged to submit temporarily to the party holding the power of purchase under this decree—to have a hearing in this Court before execution, in order that they may revoke their powers in case of a reversal.

Deponents pray that on account of the matters above set forth, the hearing of this litigation may be set down for some early day, and that the motions of appellees be denied or adjourned to the hearing.

CHARLES MORAN,
D. COMYN MORAN,
AMEDEE D. MORAN.

Sworn to before me, this 12th day of January, 1878.
EDWARD L. OWEN,
United States Commissioner,
Southern Dist. of New York.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL., Appellants, agst. WILLIAM B. DUNCAN ET AL., Appellees.	Answer to Motion for Certiorari.

To the Honorable the Supreme Court of the United States.

The answer of the appellants to the motion for a certiorari herein, respectfully shows to the Court as follows:

That the decree herein shows in its preamble on what papers and evidence it was rendered, and reference is prayed thereto, for a designation of the testimony on which it is based.

The appellants likewise refer to the record already in this Court, as a sufficient answer to the application for any further papers to be certified for the purposes of this appeal.

The appellants further show that they directed the Clerk of the Circuit Court to send up, as part of his record, all of the papers which are indicated in the preamble to the decree as being the basis of the judgment of the Court below. The clerk did in fact, probably through inadvertence, send up other papers besides those requested by the appellants, and which have greatly increased the bulk of the record. The additional papers already sent by the clerk of the Circuit Court, are unnecessary for the hearing of this cause, as they do not affect the merits, and proceed merely to collateral issues and interlocutory motions.

For further answer appellants show that the filing of proofs of claim or debt, which were submitted in the Master's office, would be entirely unnecessary, as there is no dispute now, nor was any raised at Circuit, as to the mere formal evidence of claim or the amount thereof, but the sole question presented was as to the legal effect of said proof, and whether the claim so proved relating to the coupons had not been already satisfied, and whether the claimant was not equitably estopped from disputing such satisfaction.

For answer to the application to swell the record by introducing copies of papers used on a motion at Chambers, for Injunctions and Receivers, the appellants say that the said motion being purely an interlocutory proceeding, not affecting the validity of any of the claims or liens upon the property, nor any matter before this Court, they submit that it would be a mere encumbrance upon the record to bring it before this tribunal. The opinion of his Honor Judge Bruce, referred to in the moving papers, was pronounced upon a demurrer and plea to the bill, and was inserted in the record in accordance with the rules of this Court, and more particularly because the opinion relating to the same matter, which was pronounced at Chambers by Judge Woods, on the motion for injunction, was reported in the second volume of Woods' reports, and the appellants deemed it only just that the opinion on the issues in the cause, relating to the question of the trust title, should be equally accessible to this Court. But if said papers in regard to the possession of the property, should be deemed proper records in this Court, the appellants pray that the certiorari may extend to all the proceedings for possession, including a certificate of the matters that transpired in the Circuit Court on the return day of the motion for possession in execution of the decree of the Circuit Court, when the appellants were foiled in their efforts to bring said motion to a hearing.

For further answer to the motion to send up to this Court the receivers' reports, the appellants say that the said documents are in the course of administrative proceeding of the Court below, not relating to any subject of appeal. They were not referred to in the decree, nor does any question involved in them, appear as discussed in any of the opinions rendered at the final hearing. Nor would the amount of money in the receivers hands affect the legal questions regarding its distribution.

For further answer to motion for a certiorari, for a copy of the petition, of appeal, and notice or claim of appeal allowance of appeal, and citation and bond of William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, and T. Haskins Dupuy, the appellants say that the said documents relate to a cross-appeal, taken by the aforesaid parties, sometime subsequent to the appeal of these appellants, and, to the best of their recollection, after directions had been given to the Clerk of the Circuit Court to make up the record on the appeal of these appellants. Nor do the appellants believe that in any event they were bound to make the record on a cross-appeal presenting other questions, a part of the record on their appeal.

For answer to the motion for a transcript of the depositions of Messrs. Moran, the appellants say that the said deposition was taken under a commision issued without interrogatories contrary to the rules in equity, for the purpose of being used upon a motion for a receivership, and is not referred to in the decree of the Circuit Court.

The latter answer applies to the stipulation referred to in the moving papers.

And the appellants further show that the decree is explicit in regard to the testimony on which it is founded, as follows: "The testimony taken in the cause as taken before the Master." The expense of obtaining a transcript of the record from the clerk below exceeded $1100, and according to the information obtained by the appellants, it will cost nearly $4000 to print the record as it now stands. These items are without the expense of the Tennessee record which according to the same proportion of outlay will cost about $1500. The cost of printing the additional papers, if ordered, and obtaining a transcript from the clerk below, the appellants believe will exceed $2000. If this certiorari were granted, the expense would be $8600.

For further answer to this motion, and submitting that these appellants were not bound to furnish transcripts of the records required by other appellants for the purposes of their appeal, they refer, in support of this answer, to the deposition accompanying the foregoing.

MORRIS KETCHUM,
RODOLPH MERIAN,
EUGENE REVEVIER,
CHARLES CARRARD,
CEPHISE CHUFFARD,
MASSON CHAVANNES,
HENRY JUMP,
by E. L. ANDREWS,
E. H. GRANDIN,
GEORGE HOADLY,
of Counsel.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK, } ss.

Charles Moran, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is the attorney in fact of the appellants, except Morris Ketchum, for the defence of their rights in Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company's First Mortgage Bonds. That he has read the foregoing answer, and knows the contents thereof; that the said answer is true as he is informed and verily believes.

CHARLES MORAN.

Sworn to before me, this 12th day of January, 1878.
EDWARD L. OWEN,
U. S. Commissioner,
S. D. of New York.

SUPREME COURT of the UNITED STATES,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

Brief for Appellees on Motion to vacate Order of Dec. 10, 1877, and other motions.

F. N. BANGS,
For Appellees.

NEW YORK:
Evening Post Steam Presses, 208 Broadway, corner Fulton Street.
1878.

U. S. Supreme Court.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appellants,

vs.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

October Term, 1877
—No. 879.

In this case, this court, on December 10, 1877, made an order in the following terms:

On consideration of the motion to dismiss this appeal and of the argument of counsel thereupon had, as well in support of as against the same, it is ordered that said motion be, and the same is hereby, denied.

And it is further ordered that the operation of the supersedeas arising upon this appeal be so far suspended as to allow sale to be made of the mortgaged premises, in pursuance of the decree below; and that the commissioners appointed to make the sale conduct the same, in all respects, as directed by the decree, except that the portion or share of the proceeds which would enure to the benefit of the appellants by the reversal of the decree, so far as it sustains the validity of the coupons of 1874, be paid in cash to the commissioners and by them into the regisrry of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama, to await the disposition of this appeal and the further order of the court thereon.

A motion is now made, in the name of the original appellants, to vacate this order. This motion is opposed, not only with reference to the condition of things existing at the time the order was made, but with reference, also, to the condition of things now existing: a change in the circumstances of the case and in the relations of the parties, which is stated in detail in the affidavit submitted in opposition to the motion, having taken place since December 10.

At the same time the appellees move:

1. To vacate the orders heretofore made, denying their motions to dismiss the appeal of Ketchum and others and vacate the supersedeas.

2. For leave to discontinue and withdraw the appeal of De Watteville and Ziegler, and, in part, that of Chuffard.

3. In case the appeal is retained, then for a certiorari to bring up portions of the record not embraced in the transcript now on the files of this court.

And the appellants, Ketchum and others, move to advance the cause.

The subjects involved in these various motions are:

I.—The right of those who make the motion to vacate the order of December 10, to be heard.

II.—The extent of the power of this court to direct or restrain the execution of a decree in equity pending an appeal.

III.—The propriety and justice of exercising the power of the court in this case.

IV.—The right of the appellees in their own names and on their own behalf, as well as in the names and on the behalf of Ziegler, De Watteville and Chuffard to discontinue and withdraw, in whole or in part, the appeals taken in the names of the last three persons.

V.—The right of the appellees, upon facts now existing, to have the appeal dismissed.

VI.—The right to a certiorari, if the appeal is not dismissed.

I.—The appeal was originally taken in the names of Ketchum, Merian, Renevier, Jump, Chavannes, Carrard, Chuffard, De Watteville and Ziegler. Of these appellants, Ketchum had no personal interest whatever, and the aggregate amount of sterling bonds held by the other appellants was $186,000, namely: Merian, $9,000; Renevier, $5,000; Carrard, $12,000; Chuffard, $14,000; Jump, $14,000; Chavannes, $17,000; Ziegler, $18,000; and De Watteville, $97,000. The only interest which either of these parties had was to reverse so much of the decree as permitted coupons of 1874 to be received by the Masters in payment for the mortgaged property. As this could not prossibly injure either of the appellants to an amount exceeding six per cent. upon the amount of his bonds, the aggregate amount of such injury could not exceed $11,160. But, since the appeal was taken, the bonds held by Ziegler have been assigned to Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, three of the appellees; and since the order of December 10 was made, all the bonds held by De Watteville, and ten of those held by Chuffard, have been also assigned to the same appellees. The actual ownership of the remaining appellants, therefore, does not exceed $61,000. The aggregate amount which they have at stake, altogether, does not exceed $3,660, and the largest interest of any one of them does not exceed $840. These facts appear by the affidavit of Hays, Pierson & Dupuy.

But a corporation called the Rogers Locomotive and Machine Works, as a second mortgage bondholder, reinforces the remaining appellants by joining in their motion to vacate the order of December 10. That corporation, however, is not an appellant, and it has no rights which the appellants have not,—perhaps not even the right to say that it took no appeal because it relied on the will and ability of some one else to stay the execution of the decree.

No one of the parties who now move to vacate the order of December 10, has at present any right to a hearing in this court.

19 Howard, 108, Rogers v. The St. Charles.
23 How., 483, Clifton v. Sheldon.
3 Otto, 44, Terry v. Hatch.

II.—In 10 Wallace, 296, The Slaughter House Cases, the court recognized the fact, well authenticated by the text books and reports, that "independently of statutory regulations, the term supersedeas has little or no application in equity suits, as the rule is well settled in the English courts that an appeal in chancery does not stop the proceedings under the decree from which the appeal was taken without the special order of the subordinate court."

In the expression of his views given in 10 Wallace, p. 298 and 299, Mr. Justice Bradley puts his dissent from the judgment of the court upon the grounds that such judgment has the effect of leaving many classes of judgments and decrees in equity, though appealed from, entirely effective and operative between the parties, and that such judgment remits the practice on this subject back to the practice of the English Courts of Equity, in which it is conceded that an appeal does not suspend proceedings nor act as a supersedeas on the proceedings in the court appealed from.

The inquiry therefore is, as to the effect of the acts of Congress upon an appeal in equity. Does the allowance of such an appeal, by virtue of any statutory regulation, and without special order, operate as a supersedeas?

By the language of the statute relating to appeals in equity (2 Stat., 244, sect. 2, and Rev. Stat. sec. 1012), such appeals are made "subject to the same rules, regulations and restrictions as are prescribed in law in case of writs of error."

In Kitchen vs. Randolph, 3 Otto, 87, this court stated that at common law a writ of error was a supersedeas by implication. The court then proceeded to show that the acts of Congress, instead of enlarging, limited, the operation of the writ in that respect. Its effectiveness as a supersedeas was made to depend upon a compliance with certain prescribed conditions as to time and security.

When, therefore, appeals in equity were made subject to the same "rules, regulations and restrictions as are prescribed in law in case of writs of error," there was nothing in the enactment which dispensed with the necessity of obtaining a stay by order. This language only superadded other conditions, to wit, those of time and security, which were required in cases of writs of error. Neither the legislation as to writs of error, nor that as to appeals, enlarged the operation of the writ or of the appeal. On the contrary, it restricted it.

But the present legislation on the subject is contained in seetions 1,007 and 1,012 of the Revised Statutes, the former relating to security upon writs of error, and the latter applying to appeals in equity, the "same rules, regulations and restrictions which are prescribed in law in case of writs of error." This legislation is not enabling, but restrictive. This is manifestly so, if the word "appeal" is substituted for "writ of error," in section 1,007. That would make it read thus: "In any case where an allowance of an appeal may be a supersedeas," that is in cases where it is made so by a special order, "the appellant may obtain a supersedeas" by complying with the additional conditions prescribed.

In the case at bar, the operation of the allowance of an appeal was not left to be ascertained by implication. It was specially ordered to operate as a supersedeas.

But, even conceding that a supersedeas upon an appeal in equity, is, upon some terms, a matter of right, yet it cannot be denied that a large discretion is still left to the court, both by statute and by rule.

The amount of security to be given is not specified by statute, except that it is to be "good and sufficient." This leaves room for the exercise of judicial power as to the form of the bond, the solvency and responsibility of the sureties, and the adequacy of the penalty. This judicial power is, in the first instance, to be exercised by the Court below; but, this court, so far from renouncing, has, in repeated instances, in specific cases, and by general rule, asserted its power and authority to consider the adequacy of the security to the purpose intended, and to say how far, if at all, the security is "good and sufficient," for the purpose of staying proceedings in the court below.

Certainly, it cannot be pretended that there is any statute of the United States which enacts that the execution of a decree for the collection of an indebtedness of $9,000,000 shall be stayed by the filing of a bond for $100,000. The power of determining whether, in such a case, such a bond was originally "good and sufficient," or, under altered circumstances, continues to be "good and sufficient," and how far and to what extent, if at all, it is good and sufficient, to suspend the collection of an acknowledged debt, is a power which this court has never abnegated, and, it is to be hoped, never will.

In 9 Wheaton, 553, Corbett vs. Brodie, this court reviewed the action of the court below in fixing the amount of the security, and ordered the cause to be dismissed until the plaintiff in error gave security sufficient to cover the whole amount of the judgment.

In 16 Howard, 135, Stafford vs. The Union Bank of Louisiana, this court required security for the whole amount of the decree, although the suit was a foreclosure suit, and the mortgaged property was in the hands of a receiver.

In 19 Howard, 375, Roberts vs. Cooper, this court stated that the party claiming its intervention should have the full benefit of the security intended by the law, in a case where the writ of error was a supersedeas.

In 6 Wallace, 153, Rubber Company vs. Goodyear, decided at December Term, 1867, this court held that after the allowance of an appeal, the question of the sufficiency of an appeal bond became cognizable here; and in view of the fact that some security had been deposited in the court below before the taking of the appeal, this court allowed an appeal bond to be withdrawn and a new one, in a smaller amount, to be filed.

At the same term, December, 1867, this court promulgated its present 29th rule (6 Wallace, v.). By the making of the rule this court assumed to have inherent control over the whole subject of supersedeas and security; and the latter part of the rule seems designed to mitigate, if not prevent, the hardships which might arise from enforcing the rigid direction given in 16 Howard 135, Stafford vs. The Union Bank, while, at the same time, Rule 29 seems to recognize the doctrine of that case as the true one up to that time.

If, therefore, the latter part of Rule 29 had not been in force, the Circuit Court, in this case, might and must have exacted security for the whole amount of the debt established by the decree.

But that rule is not an act of Congress, inflexible and imperative in this court. It is a rule of court. The same power which enacted it can repeal or suspend it, or except a case from its operation, or declare how far it is available to a party seeking the benefit of it (U. S. vs. Breilling, 20 How., 252). If it is found that in a given case it is resorted to for the purpose of inflicting upon the appellee hardships from which the rule itself was designed to exempt the appellant, this court can abrogate it, pro hac vice, and so administer it that it shall not operate beyond what the justice of the case requires.

In 12 Wallace, 99, French vs. Shoemaker, this court again declared it to be within its discretion to increase or diminish the amount of the bond, and to require additional sureties, or otherwise, as justice may require. This involves the right to determine how far the security already given shall avail the appellant, or, in other words, to what extent and to what end it shall be deemed "good and sufficient."

In Jerome vs. McCarter, 21 Wallace, 31, the court asserted its power to consider the sufficiency of the security upon a change in the circumstances of the case, or of the parties, or of the sureties, but at the same time announced that it would regard the action of the court below as to the "goodness and sufficiency" of the security at the time it was taken, as final. This, however, does not involve an abandonment on the part of this court, of its power to suspend its own rules, or to except a particular case from their operation, in order to avoid injustice and oppression. It only remits to the court below the power of passing on the form of the bond, the responsibility of the sureties and the value of the property.

There is another source from which power flows to this court to do justice pending an appeal. This source of power is found in Sec. 701 of the Revised Statutes, which is in the following words :

> "The Supreme Court may affirm, modify or reverse any decree or order of a Circuit Court, or District Court acting as a Circuit Court, or of a District Court in prize causes, lawfully brought before it for review, or may direct such judgment, decree or order to be rendered, or such further proceedings to be had as justice may require."

The application of this section has been strongly enforced and copiously illustrated in the brief of my learned associate, the Hon. John A. Campbell, filed on this argument. But I may, without presumption, be permitted to add something to what he has observed.

In cases of this description, the court takes the property in dispute out of the hands of the parties, and deprives them of all direct control over it and its revenues.

If the taking of an appeal is matter of right, and if a stay, auxiliary to an appeal, upon very small security, is also matter of right, then either that stay, at the will of a party, petrifies or freezes the case and the fund inflexibly into the status which they have at the time of the taking of the appeal, beyond the power of anybody or any thing (except Divine Providence) to control it, or, from necessity, the court which has adopted the found-present, existing, undenied, and undeniable right to millions of dollars?

The appeal is, in intendment of law, a nullity as to all parts of the decree which do not injuriously affect the appellants. It has vitality only as between the appellants and the couponholders. In every other respect it is void for want of legal capacity in the appellants to take it, as much so as if they had been infants, or under some other disability. They not only admitted the rights of the other bondholders, but brought suit to enforce those rights. The decree, as a decree of sale, is their own progeny, and they ought not to be permitted to play Saturn eating his own offspring.

The cases in which parties have been held to have divested themselves, by their acts or omissions in the court below, of the right to appeal, so as absolutely to close the ears of the Appellate Court against them, or in which they have been held never to have acquired the right to be heard, except, at best, within defined limits, are numerous.

A party consenting to a decree divests himself of legal capacity to appeal from it.

2 Vesey, sen., 488, Harrison vs. Rumsey.
Ambler, 229, Bradish vs. Gee.
5 Johns. Ch. 564, French vs. Shotwell.
20 Johns. 668, Same Case.
12 John, 521, Monell vs. Laurence.
4 Paige, 476, Leitch vs. Cumpston.
1 Cowen, 709, Atkinson vs. Marks.
2 Woods, 628, Anderson vs. R. R. Co.
8 Dana, 12, Story vs. Hawkins.

A party whose legal rights are not infringed by a decree is devoid of capacity—he is legally incompetent—to appeal from it.

6 Wallace, 639, Crawshay vs. Soutter.
7 Paige, 221, Hone vs. Van Schaick.
10 Id., 426, Card vs. Bird.

A partial incompetency or incapacity may exist, that is, the incapacity may relate to a portion of the decree, while it does not extend to the remainder.

6 Paige, 274, Cuyler vs. Moreland.
7 Id., 18, Mills vs Hoag.

A party who has availed himself of pending litigation for his own benefit has divested himself of legal capacity to set up a claim in opposition to the theory on which that litigation is based.

2 Woods, 323, Forbes vs. R. R. Co.
Id., 628, Anderson vs. R. R. Co.
13 Blatchford, 312, Stevens vs. R. R. Co.

A party who has omitted to raise a particular question in the court below has divested himself of the legal capacity to raise that question here, and this principle is "founded not only on the nature of the jurisdiction of the court, but on principles of great importance to the due administration of justice in all courts."

5 Wend. 620, Wood vs. Young.

An objection for want of equity cannot be, for the first time, raised on appeal.

2 N. Y., 498, Clark vs. Sawyer.

An objection in abatement of the action, on the ground of plaintiff's defective legal capacity, can not be for the first time raised on appeal.

17 Barb., 414, Baldwin vs. McArthur.
34 Id., 66, Mosselman vs. Caen.
36 Id., 392, Paige vs. Fazackerly.

Where only one question has been decided by the court below, this court is deaf to the hearing of any other question, although all parties agree to ask it.

1 Peters, 621, McDonald vs. Smalley.

This court gives no attention to claims omitted to be made in the court below.

10 Wheaton, 431, The Santa Maria.
1 How., 169, Bell vs. Bruen.
3 How., 692, Brockett vs. Brockett.
8 How., 402, West vs. Smith.
18 Id., 557, U.S. vs. Larkin.
18 Id., 289, Kinsman vs. Parkhurst.
20 Id., 45, Hudgins vs. Kemp.

Tested by these rules, the only general feature of this controversy which this court has lawful authority even to look at is, that it is a controversy over several small sums, amounting in the aggregate to less than $4,000, between a few bondholders and the holders of the coupons of 1874.

The right of the appellees, as coupon-holders, to enforce the decree against the bondholders who have not appealed has not been intercepted by any means which the law approves or allows.

16 Peters, 521, Todd vs. Daniel.

The right of the appellees, as bond-holders, to enforce the decree against the debtor and the junior incumbrancers, and as against all other bond-holders, has not been intercepted by any means which the law allows or approves, because no one questioned that right in the court below, or has legal capacity, or is legally competent, to question it here.

The right of the appellees, as bondholders, to enforce the decree against themselves, as coupon-holders, is a right which can be questioned by themselves alone.

The right of the appellees, as couponholders and bondholders, to enforce the decree against the now remaining appellants has not been intercepted, because the now remaining appellants have not enough at stake to entitle them to maintain an appeal; or, if that is not so, then the right of the appellees to enforce the decree has been intercepted to the extent of only $4,000. As to everything else, they are free from any lawful restraint, and the order of Dec. 10 has done no more than permit them to use their own property, under the limitation that, in using it, they should do no injury to others.

It is contended by the remaining appellants that they may be injured by the execution of the decree in its present shape, because of the situation of so much of the property as lies within the State of Tennessee.

The facts on that subject are before the Court in the record and on the affidavits.

A part of the mortgaged property, 118 miles in length, is in Tennessee. This part is subject to an indebtedness now amounting to some $2,000,000, secured by mortgage to Iselin, Wilson & Duncan as trustees. It is or was a question whether that mortgage is prior or subordinate to the lien of the mortgage in question on this appeal. But Hays, Pierson & Dupuy hold all the $2,000,000 of indebtedness, except about $60,000, and they hold about 90% of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage in question here. It is of but little importance to them which mortgage has priority over the other, and if it were not for the opposition of the appellants, the whole property might be sold together under both mortgages. The attitude of the appellants will compel a separate sale of the Tennessee portion; and they now urge this as a reason why the remainder of the property should not be sold until the priority of the two mortgages, as between each other, shall have been determined.

The answer to this is that they are themselves responsible for whatever difficulty exists in this respect. and that the appeal involves no question on the subject. The bill of Duncan and Elliot did not bring in the Tennessee bondholders nor their representatives as defendants; yet the appellants Merian, Renevier, Carrard, Chuffard, Jump and Chavannes proved their claims in the Duncan and Elliot suit, and so became promoters of a sale in that suit. Ketchum, however, in his bill, and Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump and Chavannes in their bill, did bring in the trustees of the Tennessee bondholders as defendants, and ask a determination of their rights. But, on June 15, 1877, the consolidation order was made, by consent, whereby the consolidated cause was directed to proceed, without prejudice to and saving, the rights of Wilson, Iselin, and Duncan; and then, on the next day, an order was made, by consent of all parties, striking the names of the Tennessee trustees from the bills on the ground of want of jurisdiction over their persons, and want of jurisdiction over the subject matter. Here, again, the insinuation of error is met by proof of consent. At all events, the emergency created by the obstinacy and folly of the appellants can be provided for without injustice to them or the appellees.

It is also insinuated by the appellants that in case the decree below should be enforced pending the appeal, they might be injured, because this court might, on the determination of the appeal, give them further time to contribute to the expense of, and share in the benefit arising from, a purchase by others of the mortgaged property. How much damage they would sustain by being excluded from that privilege it is impossible to say; but it is submitted that in the particular in question, they have no right to a hearing here. They have no legal right to anything but their share, as creditors, of the price bid on the sale by the purchaser. Beyond that, what the decree contained was matter of favor, inserted by consent.

Any attempt by a court to make $100,000 equal to $5,000,000 would be manifestly futile. While an interest is, although small, within the protection of the law as much as a large one, yet in the practical administration of a property or a fund, a large proprietor has, and must have, lawfully a preponderating influence. His rights are of the same quality as and no better than, his remedies are as effectual as, and no more so than, those of the small proprietor. But his power of purchase is greater, because his resources are larger, and because, by law, a dollar will buy more than a penny. There is nothing inequitable, unjust, or unlawful in his using what he has, to buy what a less fortunate possessor cannot buy at all. In a partition sale, the apportionment of a trust fund, or a sale under foreclosure, the largest owner has a lawful advantage of which the court cannot, by any machinery, deprive him. If partners are forced on him, he may dissolve the partnership, and then his disparity of interest must, because by law it is entitled to, tell in his favor.

There is, therefore, no reason to believe that this court can or will interfere with the portion of the decree in question. The appellants have said that the appellees shall have nothing more than their legal rights. It is not to be assumed that the court will reverse a decree in order to give the appellants anything more than their legal rights.

If it should come to the knowledge of the court that a party of capitalists had raised a sum of money and formed a partnership to buy the road, and had invited all bondholders to come in with them, and some bondholders had refused, while most had consented, would the court say that the recusants had a legal right to become partners? And would the court, after seeing that the sale was fairly made, and that no one was imposed upon, refuse to confirm the sale because the purchaser refused to encumber himself by an association with his enemies? If it would, then it may be asked, Is there any limit to the arbitrary power of the court?

Although in a foreclosure suit a court of equity furnishes equitable remedies, they are not arbitrary, but are adapted to the legal rights which, alone, lie at the basis, and furnish the guide, for the whole proceeding.

IV.—The appellees ask, in view of the changed circumstances and present position of the case, that the court will vacate the orders heretofore made, denying their motion to dismiss the appeal of Ketchum and his coappellants, and will now dismiss the appeal, and vacate the supersedeas.

At the time when the appeal was taken, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, held $3,931,000 of first mortgage sterling bonds. They now hold $5.008,000.

The bonds of Ziegler and DeWatteville, and some of those of Chuffard, have been assigned to Hays, Pierson and Dupuy.

By the terms of the assignment, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy are constituted not only owners of the bonds, but attorneys in fact of the former owners.

Therefore, Ziegler, DeWatteville, and Chuffard as to the ten assigned bonds, do not now oppose the motion to dismiss. They consent to it and join in it; and the remaining appellants have not enough at stake to entitle them, separately or collectively, to maintain an appeal.

V.—Upon the same grounds, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, in their own names and in the names of DeWatteville, Ziegler and Chuffard, ask leave to discontinue and withdraw the appeal of Ziegler and De Watteville and so much of Chuffard's appeal as relates to the ten bonds assigned by him, if the entire appeal is not dismissed. It is submitted that when, if ever, the appeal comes to be heard, it should not be heard under a misapprehension, and that the record should show that some of the appellants have withdrawn from the proceeding, and have ceased to ask for a reversal.

VI.—The motion for a certiorari, if the appeal is retained, is submitted upon the papers on which it is founded.

VII.—The motion made by the appellants to advance the cause, if the appeal is retained, is submitted by the appellees to the determination of the court, without the expression of any wish, favorable or otherwise. But it is suggested that as the record is incomplete, and is still in manuscript and very voluminous, and as the questions arising are new in this court and of great importance, no earlier time should be assigned for the argument than the first week of the next term.

F. N. Bangs,
Of Counsel for Hays, Pierson,
Dupuy, Duncan, and Elliot.

U. S. Supreme Court,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN et al.,
Trustees, &c.,
Appellees.

Brief in opposition to Motion to vacate Order of Dec. 10, 1877.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL,
For DUNCAN AND ELLIOT.

NEW YORK:
EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 BROADWAY, CORNER OF FULTON STREET.

In the Supreme Court

OF THE UNITED STATES.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.

vs.

DUNCAN & ELLIOT ET. AL.

No. 879.

A Motion to vacate the order made by this Court on December 10th, 1877.

The facts apparent to the court are, that the trustees, Duncan & Elliott, who possess the property as trustees and receivers, that the trustees of a second mortgage, and the debtor corporation which executed the first mortgage, and also the owners of nine-tenths of the first mortgage bonds, and of the debt of the corporation otherwise, concur in the opinion that the sale of the railroad and all of the property included in the mortgage, should be made in accordance with the terms of the decree. This opinion has been distinctly communicated to the court.

There are no advocates of this motion to vacate the order of December 10, 1877, save only a few persons, who represent a very small fractional part of the debt, and whose possible damage by a sale is provided for by that order.

The question presented to this court is, whether there be any inflexible rule to prohibit the vacatur or suspension of a supersedeas, or whether the court is limited by any statute of the United States in that respect.

I.

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is to affirm, modify, or reverse, any judgment, decree or order of a Circuit Court, or District Court sitting as a Circuit Court, or court of prize, lawfully brought before it for review, and to direct such judgment, decree or order to be rendered, or such further proceedings to be had by the inferior court, as the justice of the case may require.

Revised Statutes, section 701. This section is a compendious digest of several statutes, and contains a grant of judicial power to this court coextensive with the obligations and duties which have been devolved upon it.

II.

It has been settled that a party having no interest in the subject matter of a suit, or who has parted with that interest during its pendency, cannot sustain an appeal. Nor will an appellant be heard to impugn a portion of a decree which does not bear upon his rights or interests, though a party to the record and aggrieved by another portion.

Mills vs. Hoag, 7 Paige, 18, 222.
Idley vs. Bowen, 11 Wend., 227.
Cuyler vs. Moreland, 6 Paige, 274.

It follows that where an appellant has but a limited and defined interest in a common fund, and brings an appeal against a decree distributing that fund among parties who are acknowledged and unquestioned owners of the remainder of that fund, he cannot restrain the distribution or disposition except for the amount to which he is entitled, and all that he can require is, that his actual right and interest shall be assured from damage by the order and action of the court. Otherwise a partial owner might (as the partial owners in this case have attempted) obstruct and postpone hundreds in the enjoyment of their ackhowledged rights, without any legitimate advantage to themselves. Courts of Equity and Admiralty are embraced in the statutes of the United States, as holding the same position. The Admiralty case of the Thetis, 3 Hagg. Ad. R., 99, was a salvage case. The court awarded £16,000 among a number of salvors. But there were two appeals from the decree, and an inhibition to proceed with the case served on the judge. A motion was made to distribute the funds awarded to others. It was resisted because of the inhibition, and that the decree had so mixed the salvage that a separation could not be made. The judge awarded the distribution. The case of the Jeff. Davis, L. R, 2d Privy Council R., 19, is still more analogous.

The vessel was libelled upon a mortgage claim in the High Court of Admiralty. The owner claimed and defended on the ground of payment and breach of contract. The vessel was condemned. An appeal was interposed with citation and inhibition. A motion was made to the Judicial Committee for an order of sale of the vessel pending the appeal, and the order was made.

The court held that a default had occurred in the payment of the mortgage debt; that a right to sell attached; that a sale was proper; and so ordered. The cases of Stratton vs. Brown, 8 Pet., 4, and Oliver vs. Alexander, 6 Pet., 143, illustrate the proposition that when the rights and interests are distinct and separate, the Supreme Court deals with them as such, and does not allow one to interfere, to postpone, delay, or embarrass others having similar, though distinct, rights and interests.

III.

In suits at law there is commonly a joint interest and right among the contesting parties, plaintiffs and defendants.

The judgment of the court affects in the same manner the respective litigants on either side.

The writ of error serves to redress a grievance which affects the plaintiffs alike. But if a plaintiff or a defendant should decline to join in the writ, the Appellate Court does not coerce him, and the judgment would not be disturbed as to the dissenting defendant who declines the contest. The execution would not be superseded as to such a party. Courts of Admiralty and Chancery have occasion to deal with parties who have several and separate interests in the subject of the suit, sometimes arising under a distinct title. Cases of salvage, seamen's wages, creditors' bills, legacies, shareholders in corporations, and bondholders in railway mortgages, are examples.

In such suits every claimant may be heard for his interest and may claim an appeal. The appeal of one does not avail another. The failure to appeal makes the decree operative as to him. The decree can be affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the same article of the decree can be affirmed as to one and reversed as to another.

Generally, if a judgment at law is reversed for error the whole is reversed, and is not reversed quoad one defendant and left standing as to the others charged with him. It is not common in a court of law that a judgment operates directly upon property, but only upon persons.

These important differences necessarily create a difference in the operation and effect of appeals from that of writs of error.

IV.

The section of the Revised Statutes (1012) which directs the manner of transfer to the Supreme Court of causes in chancery and admiralty by appeal, are designed principally to define the relations of the Circuit or District Courts to the cause after an appeal has been perfected according to the regulations prescribed. An appeal from these courts according to these regulations may involve an express restriction or inhibition upon the inferior court from innovating or attempting (to use civil and common law language) anything to the prejudice of the appellant pending the appeal. The inhibition is served on the court, and his disobedience is an attentat.

> Barton vs. Regina, 4 Moore P. C., 273.
> Chichester vs. Donegal, 1 Adams Ec. R., 23.

But such regulations have not prevented those courts from making provident dispositions of property in their custody.

> Spring vs. So. Ca. In. Co., 6 Wheat., 519.
> Jennings vs. Carson, 4 Cr., 4.

The Court of Chancery in New York authorized a sale of property in the hands of its receiver, pending an appeal, upon the application of some of the owners and against opposition by a minority, because of the advantage of the parties interested in the cause. The court vindicated its jurisdiction upon the ground of necessity and from analogy to other courts. In the suit before the court there is no need for argument as to the authority of the court. The section (701) we have quoted confers plenary powers.

Crane vs. Ford, Hopk. Ch. R., 114.
Chapman vs. Hammersley, 4 Wend., 173.

V.

The Court of Chancery in Great Britain is invested with jurisdiction to order a sale of real property whenever it is necessary and expedient to do so for the purposes of the suit, at any time during the pendency of the suit, and before a hearing. It is a jurisdiction which has been exercised when the equities of the parties could not be worked out in a common decree.

Hearns vs. Holton, 16 Jurist, 1,077.
Wickham vs. Nicholson, 19 Beav., 38.
Hurst vs. Hurst, 16 Beav., 372.

VI.

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in the matter of this motion under the section of the statutes (701), is the same which was claimed and exercised by the House of Lords in Great Britain, as an appellate court before the independence of the United States.

The appeal from the Court of Chancery to the House of Lords was claimed to impliy an inhibition such as we have described.

Application to proceed with the execution of the decree was made in the Appellate Court. The long delay in that court caused the rule to be relaxed, and the Chancellors gradually claimed the power to proceed with the execution of their decrees, or to suspend them for cause shown to them on motion. The House of Lords conceded the power formally in 1807.

Huguenin vs. Bazely, 15 Vesey, 180–185.
Waldo vs. Caley, 16 Vesey, 206.
Corporation vs. Wood, 1 Phil., 493, 498.
Slaughter-house cases, 10 Wall., 274.

The principle upon which the suspending orders are made, is stated—Walford vs. Walford, L. R. 3, Ch. App. 812.

The power of these courts over the decree enables the court to make such regulations in respect to its execution, as would effectually promote the justice of the cause. The section of the statute we have quoted, frankly invests the court with jurisdiction so as to accomplish the purpose.

VII.

The first mortgage of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company provides for the prompt and speedy sale of the railroad and other property at the instance of a few holders of bonds, upon the happening of a default.

This is the solution which each one of the deeds of trust of the company proposes, in case of the insolvency of the corporation, to make for the benefit of its creditors. Each bondholder accepts this as the rule of action—as the social principle. It is the same rule which the law adapts for the adjustment of partnership relations upon a dissolution. A partner has a right to claim a sale. A court sometimes grants a sale before the dissolution of the firm, or a hearing of the cause.

The case of insolvency—no prospect of improvement in the condition of the firm, furnishes a sufficient motive.

Bailey vs. Ford, 13 Simon, 495.
Crowshay vs. Moule, 1 Swanst., 495.
Wyld vs. Mylne, 26 Beav., 504.

For two years and a half this railroad has been administered by a court. Every party to this suit affirms, on the record, that his object and desire is to have a sale. The order of consolidation was made to advance this object, as its terms declare. The court has the earnest application of nine-tenths of all the creditors to attain this object at once. A number have not joined in any opposition to this, and have not appealed from the decree. They acquiesce in the propriety of the order made by the Circuit Court, and sanction the order in this court.

Some of the opponents have renounced that opposition. Some of the appellants have surrendered their title as appellants.

The number that still oppose a sale can be indemnified for every loss they may possibly sustain, and be secured in the right to participate in the proceeds.

The facts bring this case within the precise terms of the acts which empower this court to review this decree, and justify the order heretofore made in this court. It is an order of proceedings which will certainly promote the justice of the cause, and enforce the rights and advance the interests of the creditors of the corporation.

John A. Campbell,
Attorney for Duncan & Elliot,
Trustees.

Supreme Court of the United States,

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

RODOLPH MERIAN et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

BRIEF FOR APPELLANTS.

TO ADVANCE CAUSES. AND IN OPPOSITION TO SUSPENSION OF SUPERSEDEAS.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. H. GRANDIN,
E. L. ANDREWS,
Of Counsel for Appellants.

MORRISON & NATHAN,
Printers and Blank Book Manufacturers,
23 Dey Street, N. Y.

Supreme Court of the United States.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

RODOLPH MERIAN ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

BRIEF ON MOTIONS.

To advance causes on Calendar,
and
In opposition to Vacatur or suspension of Supersedeas or Dismissal of Appeal.

The litigation included in the above causes involves the marshalling of the assets of a railroad corporation whose property extends from the Ohio river to the Gulf of Mexico. It requires the ascertainment of the liens and priorities upon the railroad and various portions of it, situated in four States of the Union.

Among the questions on which determinations are sought from this Court, and which, from their peculiar nature, or the peculiar manner in which they are here presented, afford strong grounds for advancing the causes, are the following:

First. A claim amounting with interest to nearly $2,000,000 is set up against the First Mortgage Bonds and claimed to hold paramount liens to those bonds upon 118 miles of this road in the state of Tennessee. To enforce the liens asserted by these bonds a suit was brought in the Circuit Court for the Western District of Tennessee and from the decree in that case an appeal now rests in this Court. The peculiarity entitling this branch of the litigation to a speedy hearing, consists in the following facts: A certain class of bonds which were issued long anterior to the bonds on which the suit is brought and which antecedent bonds are still outstanding, are really the liens upon the Tennessee section of the road, instead of the bonds on which the suit is brought and which claim to to be substituted to the liens of the original bonds. In this condition of the claims and incumbrances on the property the old bonds having the original lien, and which are now in great part in the hands of bona fide holders have been left entirely out of the litigation by the complainants. Consequently they would be in no way bound by the result of this suit or any execution of the decree thereunder.

The preliminary question on the hearing of this appeal by the Supreme Court will be whether a bond claiming to be substituted to the lien held by another security (and which latter security is outstanding with claims for over-due interest now unpaid) can be enforced as against incumbrances claimed to be subordinate without the presence of any representation of the bonds which originally held and are still claimed to hold the lien sought to be enforced. If there be such an absence of parties as would leave the First Mortgage Bondholders of this road open to another foreclosure suit on behalf of the old bonds of Tennessee issued to the Mobile and Ohio road, in which new suit this proceeding could not be pleaded as res judicata against them; we would have the extraordinary and disastrous result of a foreclosure sale on behalf of the new bonds claimed to hold the lien by substitution, without any protection accorded to subordinate incumbrances against the duplication of the proceeding by the old bonds to which the ones now in suit claim to be substituted. Besides the sale of the road under the present claim of the substitution bonds for about $2,000,000, we would have another sale for $2,000,000 more on account of the same liens to that amount claimed by the original securities. We submit that under these circumstances there is every reason to believe that the Supreme Court will remand the cause for the bringing in of parties to the litigation representing the lien of the old Tennessee bonds, so that, whatever decree may be enforced will be binding and protective. Any other course of administration in chancery would, we submit, be contrary to its spirit and practice. Therefore, to leave this cause to be reached in its regular course upon the calendar to be remanded upon grounds not reaching the merits of the controversy, would be productive of great injury to all the parties interested in the trust estate.

Second. There is another question of similar import which will also be likely to be productive of the same result. Morris Ketchum was the original trustee of the First Mortgage and remained so without challenge of his title until the civil war, when it is claimed, that by force of a proceeding which took place in Mobile, in 1863, and a publication in an Alabama newspaper, summoning him to answer the suit of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Co., for his removal from the trusteeship, he became divested of his estate and that Duncan and Elliott succeeded by mesne proceedings to his estate and title.

The sole ground for the decree stated by the Confederate Court was, that Morris Ketchum was an alien enemy of the Confederate States. In the litigation in Tennessee the complainants joined as defendants to their bill, Andrew F. Elliott, claiming under the Confederate title to be trustee, and as such the representative of First Mortgage bondholders, Morris Ketchum filed his petition to be made a defendant; but Judge Trigg denied the application and left the record as it now stands, with no legal representative of the first mortgage except the Confederate successors, in the trust estate. As there are more than $400,000 of First Mortgage bonds that have been in no way specially represented or consenting to this branch of the litigations regarding this railroad, it is necessary to determine. Whether, in view of this rejection of the title of their legal representative, Morris Ketchum, there can ensue, at least so far as the 118 miles of this road in Tennessee is concerned, any foreclosure of their equity of redemption or any decision whatsoever binding upon them, as respects the claims of these substitution bonds which have obtained the decree in Tennessee.

Hence this Court will be asked to determine whether there can be jurisdiction to divest an estate of a loyal citizen in a loyal State through a publication ordered by a Court sitting in a rebel State and upon the political grounds of his hostility to the rebel authorities. Should this Court deem that such decree is mere waste paper, then to make a binding decree in the pending suit, it would be proper to remand the proceedings to the Court below, for the bringing in of the legal trustee, Morris Ketchum as a party.

We would then have the same result as indicated in the foregoing point—the cause remanded on this ground for the making of proper parties—without any determination on the merits.

Third. Some of these questions may appear to relate more particularly to the encumbrances upon 118 miles of the road in Tennessee, but the gravamen of our appeal from the Alabama decree is that no proper execution of that decree which likewise orders the sale of this portion of the road can be had until it be determined whether there is a lien of $2,000,000 or $4,000.000, or any other amount ahead of the First Mortgage. And any execution of the Alabama decree through a suspension of the supersedeas until this question were determined, could result only in offering property for sale when the bidders could not know whether they were taking it with enormous encumbrances upon it or not. (See Appellants Brief against suspension of Supersedeas.)

This we claim to be error. And here we should mention that all parties to the Alabama suit were anxious to have the trustees of the Tennessee bonds come into that suit as appears from the Interlocutory decree, but on account of their being non-residents they could not be compelled to come in under the statute. Hence it was impossible to marshal the liens, on this property through the Alabama Decree.

There could be no equitable realization of the various liens except by the ascertainment of the liens on the entire property. All the bills asked for its sale as an entirety. There was a grave error in the Alabama decree in ordering the sale of the entire road until this claim of two or four million had been determined.

Fourth. Besides the magnitude of the property there is a very considerable number of parties in interest, estimated at not less than 2500. The question of the Tennessee liens involves the whole financial policy of that State, and invokes a determination as to whether the State of Tennessee or the railroad companies are ultimately bound for the payment, not alone of these $2,000,000 of debt on this particular road, but to the extent of many millions more of obligations, carrying liens upon almost the entire railroad system of the State of Tennessee. The financial policy of the State must therefore be largely influenced by the determination of this question.

The question, in regard to the duplication of coupon liens upon railroad properties, is involved in numerous other suits in the Federal Courts throughout the country. A question somewhat similar is contested in a cause now on the calendar of this Court, which will be reached, according to the present numbers, long before the Mobile and Ohio suits; and this cause should at least be heard at the same time.

Fifth. There is a vital question to the appellants which will be involved in the determination of this appeal, and which illustrates the justice of advancing this cause on the calendar so that the errors in the decree may be considered, before suspending or affecting the supersedeas obtained against the sale of the property.

We submit that there but two purely judicial methods of decreeing the enforcement of a mortgage security. By strict foreclosure; or by sale. We claim error in the decree for introducing a new system of foreclosure not recognized in our contract of mortgage or justified by law.

We were willing to take either a strict foreclosure, to be reached through any of the processes indicated below, or we were willing to take a decree of sale. Neither was adjudged, but, in substance, an exchange authorized, the property to be given for the return of the debtors' obligations.

We claim that the decree which is appealed from is a strict foreclosure against the First Mortgage bondholders on behalf of contested and inferior claims.

As holders of mortgage interests in the railroad seeking the realization of our security, we are entitled to have the property sold, if sold at all, for money, for legal tender. This is the right—the absolute right, of every incumbrancer. If the lien holder be entitled to have the mortgage estate sold to satisfy his claims, that right necessarily involves the receipt of the proceeds in money, and not in some other commodity. Any direction of a Court attempting to legalize some other species of payment at the foreclosure sale than money—which was loaned, and which the bond and mortgage covenant to repay—is a violation of contract rights.

We submit that no variation of the right to a sale for money is legal except by the consent of all and each of the creditors under the mortgage.

We claim that the Court below committed error in authorizing a sale of the mortgaged premises for bonds of the debtor—whether firsts or contested or inferior claims, or any other species of obligations. The object of all bills seeking judicial sales is to realize money for the property. It may be that, if all theholders of all the obligations secured by a single mortgage unanimously agree to become purchasers of the property—in short if the mortgagee intends to buy and asks for a decree accordingly — there can be no objection to permitting the mortgagee to deliver the bonds in the first instance to the Master, when if he paid money it would have to be paid back to him as a dividend in exchange for his bonds. Also when there is a single mortgagee obtaining permission in the decree to buy in this method, there is no one of his rank of lien to object.

In either instance of unanimous action of a number of mortgagees, or sole action of a single mortgagee, this variation from the mortgage contract may be allowed simply because consent of all parties interested has been given to this variation from the nature of the mortgage.

When there is such absolute unanimity among the holders of the paramount lien in favor of exchanging their bonds for the property, and upon such unanimous consent a decree is entered authorizing such exchange, (as was done by the decree appealed from without such unanimity), the practical result may be two-fold.

I. It may amount to a strict foreclosure in case the First Mortgage Bondholders do not choose to admit the subordinate lien holders to a share of the purchase. The First Mortgage Bondholders, unless some bidder offers more than the First Mortgage in which case they receive their money, take the premises for the debt.

II. The prior mortgagees may, by a unanimous consent and arrangement, admit the subordinate bondholders to a share in the purchase—to be evidenced by the securities of a new organization. This latter is, of

In the first instance the First Mortgage Bondholders get all of the property, and this cannot be objected to by any First Mortgage Bondholder, except in the case of the property being inadequate to pay the debt, when there may be advantages in an actual sale for money to determine the amount of judgment for deficiency.

As there was no claim of stock liability in this case, this would at least have enabled all the First Mortgage Bondholders to get the security to which we were entitled. It would not have realized money because no one would probably bid more than the First Mortgage, but it would have given us the next best equity —namely; the property.

The only parties interested in objecting to this plan would be the subordinate lien holders, who might have their equity foreclosed in this way without any real price being fixed for the property by competition and a genuine sale.

This may be obviated by the First Mortgage bondholders, as indicated in the second alternative above; by their consenting to give the subordinate encumbrances a subordinate participation in the purchase of the property. If such an arrangement be not effected in a manner satisfactory to all the subordinate encumbrances as well as all the First Mortgage Bondholders, the former are entitled to have a competition sale to determine whether they would not get a surplus; unless perhaps in the case where the security was shown to be clearly inadequate to realize the amount of the First Mortgage.

All of the above is predicated on the unanimous action of the First Mortgage Bondholders. It is shown that universal consent to vary the contract rights among a number of bondholders cannot injure any of their number. Consent to sell the mortgaged premises for bonds instead of money not only gives legality to such a decree but renders it innocuous, as far as the First Mortgage rights are concerned. The real reason of this is because they all agree to become purchasers. It may be said that it becomes legal because it is innocuous, and it is innocuous only when consented to by all the parties to the lien. Totally and dangerously different results follow when the Chancellor's variation of the mortgagees' rights are substituted for their own. Even if there be no contest as to what claims are included in the First Mortgage, the result of such a decree is very unjust when all the bondholders are not desirous to become purchasers. But the injustice which would transpire under the decree in this case is far greater.

Instead of the subordinate lien holders being subject to foreclosure, the contested claims dictate the terms on which the First Mortgage bondholders are to be admitted into the purchase, and threaten to cut off their equities and send them away with a pittance, by the use of the very processes which were supposed to be invoked for the benefit of the paramount encumbrancer.

This somewhat remarkable result is obtained in the following way; and is rendered practically effectual by permitting all the securities validated below to be used in lieu of money for bidding without any provision for the safety of the First Mortgage bondholder. This is in face of the fact that such an end is to be accomplished through an agreement with the stock interest.

It appears that nearly all of the holders of the contested claims, to wit, the coupons and the Tennessee claims. together with such of the holders of First Mortgage Bonds as are interested in those contested claims, besides other bondholders, entered into an agreement with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, the mortgage debtor, whereby it was arranged that the creditors of the company, who signed the said agreement, would surrender the securities now held by them for new obligations of the debtor. It is apparent that such an agreement to divest the liens outstanding against the property would require absolute unanimity among the bondholders. So far from this having been obtained. it appears from the papers before this Court, that about one million and a half of First Mortgage Bonds refused at Circuit to make this sacrifice, to wit, to surrender $560 of each $1000 First Mortgage Bond now held by them, to be given to the Tennessee claims and the Duncan coupons, and to accept the remainder of a new First Mortgage, for $440 proposed to be allowed to the present First Mortgage Bondholders for each $1000 bond.

The promoters of this scheme (one of them the agent in possession of the property) not being able to consumate it by the voluntary consent of the First Mortgage bondholders propose to attain their object by a decree which amounts substantially to a mere delivery of the property to them on their own terms,

Without the consent of the bondholders it purports to authorize bonds to be used instead of legal tender to buy the road with.

All other bidders than holders of bonds must use some other medium—to wit, legal tender.

The public generally must provide millions of cash, but the bond-bidders need only furnish discredited obligations.

Practically the difference is vital, it gives the bond bidder the monopoly at the sale—in short it is no sale, but a mere exchange, absolutely destructive of competition.

In considering this matter it should be premised that the appellants did not seek in the first instance for an absolute decree of strict foreclosure.

All forms of strict forelcosure discussed below were suggested only as alternatives, presenting far geater equity than the enforcement by the decree of the new scheme of scaling the liabilities of the corporation. The appellants desired some form of strict foreclosure on behalf of the First Mortgage, to be adopted only in case a real sale of the property was not decreed.

It was not pretended that there is any provision in the mortgage permitting a purchaser at the sale of the property to tender obligations of the railroad company as money upon his bid. On the contrary, the provisions of the mortgage are distinct enough, that money and nothing else, can be used as a purchasing medium at the sale of the property. The trustee under the mortgage had no right to obtain such a decree, nor did any any claimant to the trusteeship in this case pray for such a decree. It is not pretended that there are any statutes, in existence, in the States through which the railroad runs, providing for a species of amicable foreclosure or re-organization such as exists in the legislation of certain of the States of the Union. But the decrees below, as we submit, for error, imported a new provision into our mortgage contract, by decreeing that the bonds and coupons and the Tennessee substitution claims should be received in lieu of cash upon the sale of the railroad. The effect of this provision is far reaching, and goes a long way to impair the value of a mortgage security. It is, in practical effect, destructive of all the First Mortgage interests who do not become purchasers. A mortgage becomes no longer security for a debt to be collected through the enforcement of the lien, but is only a machine for forcing the creditor to become a PURCHASER of the property—or get nothing. The First Mortgage bondholders, and their trustee stood at circuit upon the covenants in the deed for their security, and wanted a decree enforcing the mortgage, and not in effect substituting another contract. Instead of decreeing a sale according to the mortgage, we submit that the disposition which was made of the equities presented, contains error as follows :

First. We were entitled to have the road sold for money, or at least, not for paper which by the mere act of use at the sale would destroy itself and cease to be a fund for our claims.

Second. There should have been the ordinary decree of strict foreclosure which, although not generally in favor at the present time, would have been far more equitable than the decree rendered in this cause. By this means at least, each First Mortgage Bondholder would have got his proportionate share in the property without regard to the interests which he might have in the Tennessee substitution claims or in the prosecution of some scheme of arrangement with the stock interest in the corporation. The Court below thought that there might be some technical difficulty in lodging the title under such a decree, although no such difficulty was presented by our opponents, nor do we believe that any existed.

If these recognized methods of enforcing a mortgage were to be set aside and the road sold under a new method of bidding, the following measure of justice in the direct line of chancery jurisprudence remained open for affording some equity to the First Mortgage Bondholder; if his security was not sold but transferred or exchanged, or "readjusted." It was strongly urged on the Court below, and it was not suggested by any one that it presented any legal difficulties. It was that bonds should not be accepted in lieu of cash by the Master except for an upset price equal to the amount of the First Mortgage. The effect of this provision in the decree would have been that a holder of seven and a half millions of the First Mortgage liens, out of eight millions, would have to bid the upset price of eight millions of dollars, if he desired to use his bonds in satisfaction of the bid; he would then have to apply only half a million dollars of cash. The First Mortgage Bondholder would thus be protected against the absolute destruction of a fair sale, which necessarily results from the monopoly offered by the decree to the bidder holding the obligations of the debtor. This is a customary decree, and has been frequently and latterly employed in the Federal Courts, even where the mortgage itself authorized the use of bonds at a foreclosure sale of the property.

See Judge Dillon's decree, Iowa Central R. R.

It provides a necessary and equitable protection against the holders of a considerable amount of the debtor's obligations, who by permission to bid bonds instead of money, are converted into monopolists of the bidding and purchasing power at the sale of the mortgage property. While other bidders have to pay in cash, the combination are not under that great burden; they are preferred; and so far preferred that in the absence of some of the guards indicated herein, the Master might just as well be ordered to make a deed to them, without going through the form of "putting up" the property.

This was in the mind of the Circuit Justice where his opinion states that the road might be bid in by the trustees for the First Mortgage Bonds, if the particular person could be selected. We submit, that if such an important piece of justice was to be secured, a court of chancery should have had no difficulty in finding a trustee. But the decree above suggested does not require the action of the trustees, but merely provides that the bidder who tenders bonds must tender them to the full amount of the First Mortgage. In the absence of some such protection, a majority of First Mortgage bondholders, including those holding contested and inferior claims, may combine with the corporation and with the holders of all the inferior securities, and dictate terms to the First Mortgage Bondholders which will nullify the effect of all adjudications which may be obtained upon the merits of the respective securities held by the different classes of creditors.

So far as that combination proposed an amicable reorganization of the corporate credit, it was entitled to all the moral force with which it could address itself to the mind of all parties holding First Mortgage liens upon the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. It has failed to attain that result, and these purchasing parties then sought to attain the same results through the decree; namely, the enforcement of their scheme in lieu of the execution of an ordinary judgment of foreclosure and sale. Hence they sought and obtained from the Circuit

Courts, permission to use the bonds and coupons, and substitution claims in satisfaction of bids for the property· They can bid so much more in bonds and coupons than it is possible for any one else to bid in cash, they having the greater part of the issue in their hands, that to talk of a sale under such a decree is merely to employ a suspension.

Were the property offered for cash, which is the usual, and the fair and the direct method of selling the mortgage estate, the appellants before this Court would have stood as well as the appellees.

Either the public or the appellants could have bid successfully against the agent of the receivers who proposes by the above means to become the purchaser of the property.

This is the right which we claim they are absolutely entitled to, unless they consent to waive it; namely, to have the property sold for their benefit by public and competitive sale.

As affording some equity to non-bidding bondholders, another condition is generally coupled with the privileges of bidding in bonds, and this even when the mortgage provides for such a mode of foreclosure. This is by limiting the bidding power of each bond to that per centage of its face which the amount of the bid bears to the entire amount of the mortgage debt. That is; if the mortgage is for six millions as in this case, and the bid is only $100,000, bonds are allowed to be taken in satisfaction of that bid only at one-sixtieth of their face; so that it would take the whole issue to satisfy the bid in bonds, or the difference would have to be made up in cash. This equalizes the position of the First Mortgage bondholders, who do not care to become buyers with those who choose to embark in a new enterprise. It forces those holding bonds to one of two courses: either to bid a good price, and thus make their bonds valuable as bid tokens, in which case the non-bidding bondholders become entitled to their proportinate share of a good price instead of a nominal one. The bid value of each bond is increased, but unless the bondholders can satisfy the bid in bonds—which they can only do when they have all the bonds—they must provide a cash fund sufficient to provide the non-bidding bondholders with the same proportion of the total amount of the bid which their holdings bear to the entire issue of bonds. With this limitation upon the power which the majority bidding bonds hold over the minority who are not embarking in a new investment but seeking a foreclosure, the oppressive use of bonds at the sale is somewhat guarded. So strongly does this appeal to the Courts of Equity, that this provision is inserted even where a power of bidding bonds at the foreclosure is given in the mortgage—because it is a right when so given to be equitably exercised.

It will be seen that this achieves nearly the same result as providing an "Upset Price." But the latter is more equitable where the avowed purpose of the use of the bonds as bid tokens is to secure an interest to inferior claims. In that case the First Mortgage should clearly be protected by an upset price if bonds are indued with purchasing power.

But all these guards have been broken down by the decree appealed from. The Master is ordered to received the bonds as cash. The non-bidding bondholders are to get a dividend of a bid under such auspices.

What is the result of that? The bidding bondholders offer one hundred thousand dollars or some other insignificant sum. No one can bid against them and tender cash to the amount of millions which they tender in bonds. The property is struck off to them for $100,000. Now for the distribution. Half a million of First Mortgage bonds have not become bidders. They are one-twelfth of the mortgage. The bond bidders will have complied with the decree appealed from if they hand the Masters bonds for $93,667. The balance in cash $8333, is the total fund to be distributed among the half million Mobile and Ohio First Mortgage Bondholders.

It is said they may avoid this by availing themselves of the power conferred by the decree, and themselves bidding bonds. There are two answers to this:

One is that they are foreclosing and not investing—they are selling and not buying. They are pursuing their rights under their mortgage contract, And it would be a strange perversion of a mortgage security if the creditor thereunder is to be told that the only way of realizing on his investment is by buying it.

A further answer is that, even if willing to convert himself from a seller into a buyer he must perforce, by reason of the new currency medium imposed by the decree, be placed in the unfair and inequitable position of being obliged to bid cash as against a bidder using a majority of bonds in lien of money.

He is thus placed in the unjust position of getting a pittance if he don't bid; or, if he attempts to protect himself, of providing millions of cash as against another party with hands full of bonds.

It was said at Circuit: How can this be helped, if the bondholders choose to go into one plan of bidding instead of another?

The answer is: Let the matter alone. Do not insert this bond bidding element into the decree and thereby change the whole nature of the security. Simply execute the contract; decree a sale, and leave the Master to take the currency, which is the satisfaction of bids at judicial sales, provided by the laws of the land. Do not make a new contract for the parties, and one which it is fair to say, that no rational investor would have loaned his money on—a mortgage without the benefits of a strict foreclosure, or a bona fide sale.

When the cestui que trusts consent to such a transfer of the estate, it is time to make such consent the de-decree in this cause.

We asked nothing from the Circuit Court but an ordinary decree of foreclosure and sale. The decree which was rendered amounts to a strict foreclosure, but not for the benefit of the First Mortgage lien holders, but for the benefit of those who were willing to enter into an arrangement with the company and the contested claimants. We deny the right of the Circuit Court to decree an effectual sale of the premises, not for money itself, but for the obligations of the debtor.

It is to attain the power of buying at a mortgage foreclosure in this way that some of the State Legislatures have enacted elaborate legislation—which in regard to subsequent mortgages becomes a part of the contracts.

The modern mortgages of railroads provide for such schemes in the covenants of the deed. Purchasers of railroad bonds buying under such mortgages must know the terms of their securities.

But here the perversion of our security is without law or contract.

But if this Court should deem that such a change can be made in the conditions of our security we claim that it was error to make that change without providing the security of a bid in bonds to an amount which would have protected us, namely, an Upset Price.

Sixth. This matter has also a vital bearing upon the question of suspending the supersedeas. Even if the appellees are required to deposit the full amount of all the various mortgage claims which have not entered into this scheme for transferring the property, there is still a contingency to be met; namely, that the appeals may not be successful. If they do succeed in securing the priority of the First Mortgage Bonds then the amount of deposit required, namely, the face of their bonds, would equitably belong to them had a sale meanwhile taken place by virtue of a suspension of the supersedeas. But in the other contingency, if the decrees below are affirmed on questions of priorite, and this arrangement of exchange of bonds instead of a genuine sale has meanwhile transpired, how will it be possible to fix and determine the amount of dividend to which the appellants will certainly be entitled in all events as holders of First Mortgage liens on the property. There can be no price fixed because there will have been a sale only in name without competition or any other attribute of a sale.

Seventh. The stipulation in the Tennessee cause is so plain that it cannot be missapprehended. It refers in terms only to bondholders "besides the parties to the litigation." The appellants being parties whose answer was the basis of the contest, had, of course, a right to the appeal which was allowed. Both one of the plaintiffs and his counsel in Tennessee agree with appellants that there is error in the decreeing a sale.

Eighth. As to dismissal of appeal for deficiency in amount, it seems sufficient to add that whole tenor of the above, shows that the entire amount of the bonds individual appellants is involved in the determination of the appeal, to say nothing of Mr. Ketchum, the trustee, representing at least all the bonds not individually represented before the Court.

Ninth. Proposition to suspend or modify Supersedeas on making a deposit.

The question of the power to do this is discussed in Brief already submitted.

The impossibility of doing equity toward the appellants if the supersedeas bs superseded before a hearing is had, be superseded is believed to be shown in the Petition already submitted and the within Brief and accompanying papers.

It may be added that periods of redemption must again be allowed, at least in favor of the second mortgage.

Tenth. It is earnestly submitted that if the condition of this cause be of such an extraordinary nature as to justify the unprecedented interference with the supersedeas, the ends of justice can be much better subserved by simply advancing the causes on the calendar.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. L. ANDREWS,
E. H. GRANDIN,
of Counsel for Appellants.

4 Ollo 672
7 Parze 230

Clifford

Supreme Court of the United States.

MORRIS KETCHUM, et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
W. B. DUNCAN, et al.,
Appellees.

RUDOLPH MERIAN, et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
W. B. DUNCAN, et al.,
Appellees.

Petition for Rehearing

ON

Order Vacating Supersedeas. &c.

Filed by leave of Court.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. H. GRANDIN,
X E. L. ANDREWS,
of Counsel.

WASHINGTON:
R. O. POLKINHORN, PRINTER.
1878.

Feb 23 Supersedeas
1878 & advance

Synopsis of Grounds for Rehearing Alabama Case.

I. The motion really decided is one never before the Court, namely, to limit the appeal. It was conceded by Appellees' counsel that this was the appropriate motion. We could have fully answered that motion had we had the opportunity which we now seek.

II. While no part of the appeal has been actually dismissed the order proceeds upon the theory that it has; namely, that we could not appeal from the decree of sale. We are relegated to a bond whose condition is valueless if that part of our appeal is well taken. If the appeal from the terms of sale is properly brought the bond is conditioned to give us more or less of nothing.

Mr. Justice Bradley's Opinion. Assignments of Error.

Tennessee Case.

III. If the appeal from the questions of priority of the old Tennessee bonds is properly taken (which is not disputed), then the Appellees' bond is conditioned to pay our share of the proceeds of a sale which takes place under a decree in which two millions of outstanding bonds are not represented which claim to hold the lien to which complaining bonds seek to be substituted. Who would bid under such a sale not knowing whether he was buying a debt of two millions of dollars?

IV. Our rights are to be guaged under and by a sale

While the phraseology of the sections in the Revised Statutes, relating to this subject differs from the above, there is nothing in the Revision to indicate any change in the legislative intention in reference to the extent of operation which the statutory supersedeas should possess. On the contrary, the provisions indicate that the legislative intention remained the same. (Rev. Stat., sec. 1000.) In the absence of opposite provisions, the substance of the law remained unaffected by the Revision.

94, U. S., p. 50, Doyle vs. Wisconsin.

The Revision Commissioners were authorized only to "revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate."

16 Statutes at Large, p. 74.

Hence the above statute is a binding legislative declaration, that the stay shall continue "pending the appeal."

Supreme Court Construction of the Effect of Supersedeas.

"The proceedings in relation to that writ were in due time; and when docketed in this Court, it stayed execution by force of the act of Congress while the case was here pending."

Hogan v. Ross;
11 Howard, 297, per TANEY, C. J.

English Construction of the Legal Effect of Supersedeas.

"And they all resolved that the writ of error was a supersedeas until the error was examined, affirmed, or reversed."

Bishop of Ossory's case, Croke temp. Jac., p. 594.

Construction of Section 701.

"JUDGMENT OR DECREE ON REVIEW. The Supreme Court may affirm, modify, or reverse any judgment, decree, or order of a circuit court, or of a district court in prize causes, lawfully brought before it for review, or may direct such judgment, decree, or order to be rendered, or such further proceedings to be had by the inferior courts as the justice of the case may require." The Supreme Court shall not issue execution in a cause removed before it from such courts, but shall send a special mandate to the inferior court to award execution thereupon."

Similar provisions authorizing the Courts to make, in the above connection, "such other orders as the justice of the case may require," existed in English and American jurisprudence before the Judiciary Act.

"And thereupon to reverse or affirm said judgment, and to make such other order or decree therein as equity and justice shall require."

Greenleaf's New York Laws, Act of 1784, Vol. 1, Sec. 7.

It was never claimed that the above clause of the sentence in the statutes providing for reversing or affirming, was intended to give the New York Courts power to affect the specific provisions of law regarding supersedeas.

On the contrary, as shown by Kent's opinion below, the statutory provisions regarding supersedeas were held to control any discretion of the Courts to effect the stay before hearing.

Far less, so under the similar section of the Federal Statutes which is plain beyond peradventure.

"Section 701, Judgment or Decree on Review."

That section taken in connection with its statutory title, and examining the last sentence of it, in reference to mandates, seems clearly intended to authorize the Supreme Court "to affirm, modify, or reverse the judgment," and in addition, besides merely affecting the judgment below, as it stands, to direct the inferior Court to take "further proceedings" in the cause. When the Revised Statutes intend to refer to execution or process mesne or final, they use those very terms. In fact they use the term execution specifically in the same section.

The necessity for this provision arose out of the ancient practice of the House of Lords to give direction to the Court of Chancery to rectify its decrees. This practice is made the Federal law by the system of mandates in lieu of execution in this Court. It is in connection with "directing such decree to be rendered" that "such further proceedings are to be had."

See Daniel's Chancery, vol. 2, p. 1502. 4th Amer. Ed.

Therefore, "further proceedings" under the provision for "decree on Review," in subsequent connection with "affirming, reversing, or modifying the judgment," and followed by sending "down the mandate" can hardly be construed to authorize action before the hearing; or to refer to "supersedeas" which is elsewhere provided for, or to "execution" to which distinct reference is always made in the Statutes. It would be disregarding the context to give it such a construction and to apply it to a different subject-matter. Such clause is merely a legislative declaration of an immemorial practice by which Courts of Equity Appeal after hearing a cause and affirming or reversing proceeded to enforce all the equities by directing further proceedings to be had by the inferior Courts. Numerous applications of this authority are to be found in the Supreme Court Reports.

Insurance Co. vs. Piaggio. 11 Wallace.

And cases cited by Commissioners of Revision and which citations being made in pursuance of law, 16 Stat., p. 74, and adopted by Congress, are at least indicative of the legislative intention in regard to the powers they were granting. Congress might have conferred this power of acting on the subject-matter, but has it done so in a section providing for review and as against its own specific regulations for supersedeas?

Nature of the Writ of Supersedeas.

A supersedeas is generally understood as applicable to appellate proceedings; but this was by no means the sole operation of the writ, nor, indeed, its earliest application in England. In fact, in some States of the Union, as in Virginia, its functions are still invoked in other directions than for the purpose of aiding appellate jurisdiction.

Suffice, now, to consider it in its ordinary significance, which is laid down in one of the most eminent authorities as follows:

"Supersedeas, in its legal acceptation, means the preventing, as well as the setting aside or annulling of an act. A supersedeas is sometimes express; at other times implied. Every writ is a supersedeas by implication, by which, although no writ of supersedeas has issued thereupon, the doing of an act is prevented."

Bacon's Abridg., 274, 275, 284.

Reason for Writ of Error Operating as Supersedeas.

A writ of error is a supersedeas by implication.

Bacon's Abridg. Supra.

The true reason why the writ of error carried this effect is to be found in this:

Writs of error did not at common law issue from the Appellate Court which was to pass upon alleged errors. It was an Original writ issuing out of the administrative offices of the Chancery and was a commission under the King's seal to examine the record and reverse or affirm the judgment. It was a contempt of the King's writ to proceed with the execution, while he commanded an examination of errors. The contempt was enforced against the parties, the sheriff, and even the judges.

It was not the mere transfer of the record that made the writ of error a supersedeas.

In the Bishop of Ossory's case, where the question came up from the King's Bench in Ireland whether the writ of error was a supersedeas, per se, where the record was not removed to the higher Court, it was held as follows:

> "And by the opinion of all the Justices the writ in judgment of law is a supersedeas, although the record itself be not sent. For if error be brought in Parliament upon a judgment in this Court the transcript is only sent and the record remains in the King's Bench."

Croke Supra, pp. 3–5.

Common Law Supersedeas Writ of Error Operated to Stay Appellate Court.

It was not because the record of the cause was in the appellate court, nor under any claim that the cause had got into the higher court by virtue of any writ under any inherent powers of an appellate court; but, on the contrary, because the writ issued from the fountain of all justice in the realm commanding one tribunal to correct the errors of another that, per se, it operated as a supersedeas, as an annulling of the judgment below until there was judgment in error.

The original writ of error was a warrant for the appellate court to proceed with the examination of the errors. To execute on the judgment pending the writ was treated as a contempt of the King's authority. It would therefore have been equally a contempt of the writ directing the examination of errors for the Appellate Court to have directed execution before examining the errors. Indeed, under the constitution of the common law courts of error it is difficult to conceive of any other business before them than the examination of the record for consideration of error. No case can be found where any English or American superior court of common law jurisdiction ever undertook to order execution before examination of the errors.

English statutory system of bail in error.

The system by which a defeated party could delay execution without any security whatever, developed into a hardship against the successful party below, and resulted in the intervention of Parliament.

A writ of error had theretofore been an absolute writ of right without any bonds.

Van Antwerp vs. Newman, 4 Cowen, 82.

Acts passed in the reigns of James I and Charles I, provided "that no execution shall be stayed or delayed upon or by any writ of error, * * * unless the person in whose name such writ of error shall be brought, with two sufficient sureties, shall be bound," &c. This legislation, which was at first confined to certain enumerated actions, was extended, by acts passed in the reign of Charles II, so as to include many forms of suit, with the proviso that "it should not extend to any writ of error brought by any executor or administrator."

All classes of cases in error not within the bail statutes continued to be supersedeas without bond.

State legislation on writs of error.

The earliest American legislation on the subject, immediately after the Revolution, preserved a curious adherence to the English system.

By the act of 1784 the Assembly of New York enacted as follows:

"It shall be lawful for any party to sue forth, out of the court of chancery, a writ of error."

Greenleaf's Laws, vol. 1, sec. 7.

It will be noticed that the writ did not issue from the appellate court. The common-law jurisdiction of chancery was still preserved for the issuance of this writ.

There was a similar provision in the revision of 1813, "to sue forth a writ of error out of the court of chancery."

N. Y. Revised Laws, chap. 10, sec. 7.

Indeed, as late as the revised statutes of 1830, and under them, the chancellor was still an authorized officer for granting writs of error to courts of law.

Part 3, chap. 9, sec. 28.

We refer particularly to the New York legislation on this subject, because the following statute, providing for bail in error, was apparently the first ever enacted in this country, and was passed in the very year preceding the enactment of the federal judiciary act.

It reads as follows:

"That no execution shall be stayed upon debt, bond, or contract, unless such person or persons in whose name such writ of error, with two sufficient sureties, such as court, wherever such judgment is given, shall allow of, shall first before such stay made or supersedeas awarded, be bound," &c.

It was not to extend to writ of error by executor or administrator.

Act February 6, 1788.
Greenleaf's N. Y. Laws, vol. 2, p. 3.

The writ was still treated as a writ of right in all civil cases, with the above incidents.

Act March 20, 1801.
Kent and Radcliff's N. Y. Laws, p. 200.

The above system of legislation illustrates that the writ was still treated in this country as an original writ of right, sub modo, the statutes. It was not a writ from the appellate court. The Chancellor still issued it just as it issued in England from the common-law side of the Court of Chancery. Hence all argument is wrongly predicated which attempts to justify any control over the supersedeas, upon the supposition that it issued originally by virtue of the inherent powers of the appellate courts. It never did so issue, but was an original writ out of chancery and not out of the Appellate Court.

Nature of stay of proceedings on appeals in equity in English Jurisprudence.

In bringing appeals to the House of Lords, there was no writ. The appeal was purely the act of the parties, by petition, to the House.

It was originally a stay of proceedings, per se, without bond.

The doctrine was thus stated by Mr. Mansfield:

"Considering it upon principle, pending the appeal there can be no final judgment, and until final judgment, no execution."

Warden of St. Paul's vs. Morris, 9 Vesey Jr., 316.

The subject who was not satisfied with the advice given the King by his Chancellor, was entitled to have the property held intact against execution until the King could obtain the advice of his full Council in Parliament.

But, as in the case of writs of error, the practical inconvenience of an absolute stay (without security) upon the orders of the chancellor became apparent to the courts. In the case of chancery administration these difficulties were greatly enhanced from the fact that an appeal lay to the House of Lords from interlocutory as well as final decrees, and with the same absolute stay of all further proceedings in the entire cause.

Finally, the case of Lord Pomfret vs. Smith, (Lord Apsley,) in 1772, decided that his jurisdiction was suspended only as to the matters appealed from, but that it was not totally suspended so as to prevent a proceeding as to any other matter in the cause.

Palmer's Practice, H. L., p. 9.

Post-Revolutionary Law in England and New York in Regard to Stays in Equity.

In England there was until very lately a total absence of statutory provisions on this subject. But there was a somewhat remarkable voluntary relinquishment of the effect of stays by the House of Lords.

(Resolutions of Lords, 1807. 15 Vesey, p. 182. McQueen's Practice of House of Lords, p. 321.)

Since 1807 stays have therefore been in the discretion of the Chancellor. An appeal has ceased to be a stay per se in any case, and could only become so by special order.

In New York, for some years previous to 1830, the Courts held that it was prima facie a stay without bond; but, according to the English practice after the Revolution, that the stay was subject to the order of the Chancellor.

Green vs. Winter. 1 John. Ch. 77.

Finally the New York Revised Statutes of 1830 acted fully upon the subject and apparently in the same spirit and even in the letter and language of the acts of James and Charles in reference to writs of error. They provided that appeals should not stay proceedings unless a bond be given by or on behalf of the appellant.

Part 3, Chap. 9, Sec. 82,

After the passage of these statutes, the whole philosophy of the subject was explained in the following opinion by Chancellor Kent, and we particularly refer to it as defining the effect of statutes, similar to the Federal law, on the question of the power involved in this case.

"One of the evils of our practice was that the appeal suspended the proceedings in all cases in the first instance without giving to the respondent any adequate security for his debt or costs Another was that the Chancellor possessed an unlimited discretion and might deprive the appellant of the benefit of his appeal in any case by permitting the respondent to proceed and enforce the order or decree of the Court below before the appellant could obtain a hearing before the Court of dernier resort."

"The object, therefore, of the revisors was to take from the Chancellor in all cases where it could be done without injury to the rights of suitors, the discretionary power of permitting the party to proceed in the suit notwithstanding the appeal, and at the same time to furnish to the respondent an adequate remedy against the injurious consequences of delay.,'

(The exception of "injury" referred to perishable property taking testimony and contempt, which were excepted by the statute. Though the Chancellor only is mentioned in the above, there never was even an application to the Court of Errors after the Acts, to interfere with a stay. When a statute said there should be a stay, it was not necessary that it should enumerate each court that it stayed. Its operation was without exception, unless it so specified.)

Hart vs. Mayor. 3 Paige, Ch. 384.

The object was to terminate the confusion and uncertainty which had for so long pervaded the exercise of the power of dispensing with stays and to provide a statutory indemnity which would satisfy every just and proper requirement of the respondent in the appeal and at the same time secure the inviolability of the subject-matter of the suit in case of the appellant's success. It must be remembered that the Chancellor is speaking of the post-revolutionary practice in New York which never had an analogy in the Federal law, because Congress legislated on this matter of stays in equity in 1789, while New York did not do so until 1830, but tacitly during the interval adopted the later English law on the subject.

These statutory provisions were deemed to afford full recognition of the legal presumption in favor of the judgments below. They threw the burden on the appellant of furnishing full security in anticipation that the judgment would be affirmed. Therefore, notwithstanding the tacit adoption in New York of the loose practice regarding stays which existed in England about 1800, yet when the above statutes were enacted, and in language far less mandatory than the Federal law on the subject, Chancellor Kent held them to be a manpatory substitute for the previous system of practice.

History of Federal jurisprudence in reference to supersedeas in error and appeal.

The state of the law on this matter, when the judiciary act was passed, was as follows:

A writ of error was still a supersedeas per se in all cases not within the bail statutes. In cases under those statutes it was a supersedeas upon compliance with the regulations for security prescribed in those acts.

Appeals were per se stays of proceedings upon the order appealed from, according to the leading case in 1772. That is, they did not stay all proceedings where the appeal was from an interlocutory order which was separable from further proceedings in the cause. Where the appeal was from a final decree the appeal was per se and, without bond, a stay of execution. This state of the law must not be confounded with the English after our Revolution.

In this condition of the matter Congress undertook to deal with the subject.

By Section 22 of the Act of 1789, it was provided that "Final judgments and decrees in a Circuit Court in civil actions and suits in equity may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon writ of error."

Two notable differences were at once created by this act between the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords and that of the Supreme Court. The one confined the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to final decrees, and the other made writs of error the process for reaching the appellate court.

The first was the abolition in Federal procedure of appeals from interlocutory orders. The bearing of this upon the matter of staying proceedings was important. Much of the difficulties and embarrassments arising from the legal principle in England—that appeals to the Lords were per se stays of proceedings—arose from the fact that those appeals lay at every stage of the cause. On the other hand, by this limitation of the Federal appellate power, that inconvenience was practically abolished. The whole cause was proceeded with to the final termination irrespective of any dissatisfaction with interlocutory orders until it was presented in its completed form to the Supreme Court.

In reference to the manner of reaching the Appellate Court, a curious difficulty was presented, arising out of the very framework of our system of government and the Federal judicial system. In England, the King being the fountain of justice from whom all original writs issued, and a writ of error being an original writ issuing from the King's Chancery, the revisional power of the superior English courts was put in motion by a commission under the King's hand. When the American Constitution established a co-ordinate system of governmental departments, the theory of original writs was impaired at its very source. There was no authority outside of the judicial tribunals from which a warrant could be obtained to examine the errors in a record. There was no administrative office of writs. The only writs that could issue for the administration of justice must, under the American Constitution, issue from the courts acting under authority of law. There was not even an officer in the Federal judicial system corresponding to the Chancellor who issued the writ of error in New York. Hence there could be no writ of error in the exact technical sense of the ancient original writ.

Congress had to provide some substitute for it in order to put in motion the appellate power of the Supreme Court. Writs of error, so called, under the statute were established running in the name of the President, and tested in the name of the Chief Justice. The issuing of the citations which is really the operative act to put the appellate proceedings in motion is not by the appellate Court, but by a judge of the Circuit Court or Justice of Supreme Court.

Sec. 22, act 1789.

This was the substituted system for original writs of error in chancery. The writ was in no sense from the appellate Court. But the substance of the matter was and is, that upon compliance with the statutes the issuing of citations in error becomes matter of right. No allowance of the writ is required from any judicial officer.

Davidson v. Lanier, 4 Wall., 447.

This statutory writ, unlike its ancient prototype, has been held not to act on the parties to the cause, but only on the record. On this basis it has been held that error in a suit by a State can be re-examined; and in no case can judgment be given for non-appearance, but the record must be "re-examined, reversed, or approved."

In the above are the main characteristics of the Federal writ of error. Can there be any doubt that it is essentially a statutory writ of right? The writ issues, of course, upon the signature obtained to the citation in error.

What are the statutory preliminaries required by the Judiciary Act and its amendments for the obtaining the citation?

The judge signing the citation was required to take good and sufficient security that the plaintiffs in error shall answer all damages and costs, &c.

22d section act of 1789.

"The writ of error shall be a supersedeas and stay of execution when served within ten days, &c., until the expiration of which term of ten days, executions shall not issue in any case where a writ of error may be a supersedeas." "Where the decree is affirmed, the Circuit or Supreme Court shall adjudge to the respondent just damages for delay and single or double costs."

Section 23, act 1789.

The collocation of the clauses of the above section is indicative of a pretty definite scheme on the subject of supersedeas. The language is most imperative, that the writ of error, with the bond, "as aforesaid," shall be a supersedeas; and in the same section power is given to the Supreme Court to impose damages for delay, and double costs in addition to the penalties of the bond. Could anything show more absolutely the intention of Congress that the stay should remain until the merits were passed upon? When the judgment was "affirmed," the appellate Court could mulct the appellant on account of the delay caused by him. To give effect to all the verbiage of the statute, we should inquire what Congress meant by "a supersedeas and stay of execution." The above definition from Bacon shows that supersedeas meant annulling of judgment below, besides the stay—which latter we have additionally expressed above. Surely Congress must have intended to guard this right of supersedeas carefully.

By the 22d section only supersedeas bonds in error were within the intention of Congress under the Judiciary Act. The bond was required to answer "all damages and costs."

Difficulties arose under this act when a supersedeas was not desired, because the judge could not sign the citation in error unless the bond covered damages.

After five years an act was passed that the security required on signing citation in error, which shall not be a supersedeas, "shall be sufficient to answer all such costs" as upon affirmance of the judgment or decree may be judged or decreed to the respondent in error. This determined the conditions of the bond in error without supersedeas, and left the option to the appellant to give bond with or without stay.

Therefore, when we consider that supersedeas was originally, in Federal practice, an absolute essential of appeals, can there be any doubt that Congress intended to make it irrefragible?

The next step in Federal legislation re-established the distinctive features of error and appeal, or, rather, for the first time incorporated them in Federal practice by the Act of 1803. That act provided that "such appeals shall be subject to the same rules, regulations, and restrictions as are prescribed by law in case of writs of error."

The Act of 1803 provides that an appeal "shall be allowed to the Supreme Court," &c., but an allowance is a matter of right which will be enforced by mandamus.

United States vs. Gomez, 3 Wall., 752.

An important feature in the above legislation not mentioned in the previous discussion is the terms of the supersedeas bond required by the statute. It speaks of "affirmance," and is conditioned to make the appeal or "plea good." Can these provisions be strained into any consistency with a theory that Congress did not intend the supersedeas to operate until the hearing? Such a construction is still further rebutted by the assimilation provided for in the above and all subsequent legislation, between practice on appeals and writs of error, for the latter, we have seen, proceeded from an authority higher than the Appellate Court, and was inconsistent with any ordering of execution until errors were examined.

This legislation illustrates the most direct purpose to prevent execution until the Supreme Court passed on the errors.

The Supreme Court Writ of Supersedeas.

The writ of supersedeas which the Supreme Court has sometimes granted is under its power to grant "writs necessary to the exercise of its jurisdiction."

94 U. S., Goddard vs. Ordway.

There are various writs of supersedeas in the natura brevium. The writ which the Supreme Court grants under the above clause of the Revised Statutes is a different supersedeas from the one secured by statute.

No argument in favor of any lawful control by the Supreme Court over the supersedeas in error provided by the statute can be deduced from its power to grant a different kind of supersedeas.

Right to Sell Perishable Property.

Most of the appellees' cases cited were of this character.

The source of this power is tersely stated by Chief Justice MARSHALL, as follows:

"The motive assigned for the order never is that the Court is in possession of the cause, but that the property in possession of the Court is in a perishable state. A right to order the sale is for the benefit of all parties, not because the cause is depending in that particular Court, but because the thing may perish while in its custody, and while neither party can enjoy its use."

Jennings vs. Carson; 4 Cranch. (S. C.), p. 75.

Parliamentary System of Counter Stays in Admiralty.

The only analogy to the order made in this case is to be found in the system established by statute in England, for execution pending appeals to the Privy Council from the Vice-Admiralty Courts. Some of the cases cited by appeallees were under this statute.

By that act of Parliament, 2 William IV., C. 51. the following rules regarding appeals from Vice-Admiralty Courts were established:

"In all cases in which an appeal is asserted, except respecting slaves, the judge may proceed to carry his sentence into execution, provided the party in whose favor the decree has been made give bail to abide the event of the appeal by two sureties, in the amount of the value of the property or subject in dispute, together with the further sum of £100 sterling to answer costs in the event of the same being awarded by the Supreme Court."

This establishes a system exactly the opposite to any known to the common law or chancery practice. The appellants give bond to be allowed to execute the decree. There were peculiar reasons for the establishment of this unique system in Admiralty proceeding. When a ship is libelled she remains in the passive custody of the Marshal or other executive officer of the Court of maritime jurisdiction. There is no administrative officer of those Courts corresponding to Receivers in Equity. The ship therefore remains unused in port, and being of a comparatively perishable nature it was found in many instances that the subject-matter was lost or greatly deteriorated before hearing in the Privy Council. The old system by which inhibition followed per se on an Admiralty appeal and under which execution was an attentat or contempt was substituted by the foregoing statutory scheme of stays. In our Federal admiralty practice we have not followed the English system of giving the appellee control of the subject-matter pending appeal. We have enabled the appellant to counter-bond and prevent the appellee from removing the res.

Rules in Admiralty, No. 133.

The above statement shows that there is no analogy between the incidents and circumstances of an equity and admiralty appeal. Indeed, the primary power to receive stipulations from claimants of the res libelled, at the time of seizure, places this whole subject on a different basis in admiralty proceedings. Hence the legislative power has not seen fit to adopt those provisions in the case of equity appeals. Indeed, in this country the subject has been left to the inherent power of the Court having the custody of perishable property to dispose of it. Yet in the face of a contrary scheme of our statutes, the appellees propose a course similar to the English prize proceedings.

Appeal Falls with Supersedeas.

Distinction between supersedeas on separate appeal from Decree of Distribution and from Decree of Sale.

A very broad difference in principle can be pointed out between the illustration adduced in the opinion to show the power to modify the supersedeas and the case at bar.

Where one of several parties interested in a common fund appeals from a decree of distribution, such appeal, besides being separate, is several. The rights and interests of the appelant can be severed from the shares of those in similar interest. Upon a proper motion—to limit the effect of the appeal to the interest of the appellant in the fund—the court may so limit the appeal—retaining enough in the fund to cover the fullest claim of appellant. When the appeal is so limited the supersedeas falls with it. Such motion has never been made in this case—as was conceded by counsel for appellees on the argument; nor would it have been available.

When one of a number of parties in interest in a property appeals from a decree of sale, that appeal involves the whole case and the decree cannot be executed until the appeal is determined. That follows necessarily from the nature of the question involved in such appeal. As the objection is to the terms and conditions of the sale, the sale would of itself fix and limit the interests and results to the appellant as well as to all others interested in the litigation. Therefore, it would be a denial of the right of appeal to interfere with a supersedeas in such a case.

The matter is clearly explained by Justice Nelson in the following case:

Appeal from a decree of sale on a libel for salvage. Only part of the respondents and part of libellants are in the appeal.

"The whole decree is brought up on the appeal. In its nature it is not severable."

The Roarer, 1 Blatchford, p. 1.

No motion made to limit or dismiss appeal pro tanto, but opinion proceeds upon invalidity of principal part of appeal.

The gist of the appeal was from the terms and conditions of sale. We refer to Justice BRADLEY's opinion to show that "this matter was beset with difficulties." The errors in this respect were shown on the face of the decree, and could have been the subject of a bill of review for error apparent. Error lies for defects in execution as well as judgment.

Coke on Litt., 288 B.;
2 Tidd's Prac., 1,134;
Insurance Co. vs. Piaggio, 16 Wall,

But in equity proceedings errors in terms of decree have been immaterial subjects of appeal.

If the Court orders an estate to be sold for cotton or sheet iron, be the judgment correct in all other respects, and though a sale is prayed for, cannot error be assigned in such a decree? All matters that should be proved must be in issues, but matters that cannot be reached until judgment cannot be pleaded.

Though accounting be prayed for, the terms of the accounting may be the subject of appeal.

Bobe vs. Stickney, 36 Ala., 492.

Time for redemption not allowed in decree is error apparent.

Clark vs. Reyburn, 8 Wall.

We most respectfully submit that if the terms of this decree be not capable of assignment in error, then the whole principle of errors apparent is disused.

May we also add that now, with more of the record before it, the Court will see that the errors assigned in the terms of sale are far more substantial than seems to be supposed.

See opinion and assignments of error already submitted.

This question seems to us to be really the foundation of this whole difficulty. Certainly, if the conditions of sale be the main subject of appeal (and the Court below conceded that they would deprive us of nearly all our interest in the property), this Court would not relegate us to a bond or any stipulation conditioned upon such a sale, for that would be merely a nugatory instrument.

See brief submitted.

Recapitulation.

I. Writs of error never proceeded from the appellate tribunals, and consequently they had no inherent control over them. At first, supersedeas per se without bond and afterwards upon giving bond, the supersedeas was never touched nor was the power to impair it ever claimed by the Appellate Courts of common law. It was not their writ to meddle with.

II. In England, appeals were stays per se without bond, and at the time of the American Revolution neither the Lords nor the Chancellor had power to dispense with the stay. This Court would therefore have no inherent or inherited power to interfere with the supersedeas.

III. Our statutes certainly did not take away any part of the right of supersedeas. Considering the right as it stood in England at the time of the Judiciary Act, and considering that act merely as a regulation, the right to a supersedeas with all its common law effects remained the same, on giving security, just as it did in England after the statutes of bail.

IV. The power given by Congress to this Court to award damages for delay, and single or double costs; the terms of the bond required; the fact that supersedeas was under the original Federal practice an essential of all appeals, indicate a distinct legislative intention not to confer on this Court the power to interfere with the supersedeas.

V. The very nature of a writ of error as an original writ, to whose incidents appeals are analogized by the statutes ; the Congressional declaration in the Act of 1872; the English and Supreme Court decisions above cited, as to the continuance of the stay, all indicate that the Appellate Court cannot interfere with the supersedeas "pending the appeal."

VI. Section 701 conferring, under the Constitution, power on the Supreme Court to "review the decree,' and to carry out the results of that review with the amplitude of the ancient Courts of Equity Appeal by such other orders as justice, &c. cannot, upon the principles of statutory construction, nor, indeed, under the plain language of the section, be claimed to affect "supersedeas and execution" which are fully provided for by other sections of the Statutes.

On account of the above matters, not before presented to the Court, we respectfully petition for an opportunity to present the same orally.

E. L. Andrews,
of Counsel.

We unite fully in the foregoing.

George Hoadly,
E. H. Grandin,
of Counsel

Clifford

Supreme Court of the United States.

MORRIS KETCHUM, et. al,
Appellants.
vs.
W. B. DUNCAN, et. al.
Appellees.

MOTIONS

For Release from Supersedeas Bonds,

AND

To Substitute Participation in Plan of Purchase, in lieu of Appellees' bonds.

Appellants Dismissing their Appeal; on Foregoing Relief.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. H. GRANDIN,
E. L. ANDREWS,
of Counsel.

WASHINGTON:
R. O. POLKINHORN, PRINTER.
1878.

Supreme Court of the United States.

MORRIS KETCHUM, et. al,
Appellants.
vs. 879.
W. B. DUNCAN, et. al.
Appellees.

Petition to be Relieved from Supersedeas Bond and to substitute participation in Purchase in lieu of Appellees' Bond, and for other relief.

To the Honorable, the Judges of the
Supreme Court of the United States:

Your petitioners, the appellants, being willing to relinquish their appeal, and forego the personal security of appellees as follows, most humbly represent to this Honorable Court that only the relief indicated herein would afford some opportunity of their being saved from the total loss—which they must certainly incur by the predicament in which they are now placed, Having relied on the appeal with supersedeas to prevent the execution of the terms of sale in the decree, they allowed the time limited for them to participate in the bond purchases under the decree to expire. The execution now proceeds under those same erroneous terms of sale which they sought to have reversed and which deprive them of all results of that sale. (See below.) They are thus left without such equities as were given them by the decree, to secure their undisputed rights in the property, and meanwhile the main and essential part of their appeal is lost with the loss of the supersedeas. They would have been in just so much better position had they not tried to exercise their right of appeal and submitted to the decree of the Circuit Court—by the total amount of their bonds.

The appellants could not be in worse position if the judgment were in all respects affirmed because as shown hereinafter, the condition in the appellee's bonds render them inoperative.

Under these circumstances they most respectfully and earnestly petition for the following relief:

That the present order be modified or the issuing of the mandate stayed, unless the appellees stipulate to exercise the privilege of bond bidding in trust for all the bondholders, by admitting them into the plan of reorganization, and reimbursing the expenses of the trustee.

This ends the appeal, but as shown below, we are forced to this by the loss of the supersedeas, unless the Court makes one of the following orders:

I. Provide that the sale shall be subject to the lien of appellant's bonds;

II. Require the deposit of sufficient money or United States bonds to cover our claims, with a stipulation that it shall be paid to us if we succeed in the appeal. Or if the judgment be affirmed the bond-purchase of the road under the present decree should be for the equal benefit of all holders of trust mortgage securities.

Your petitioners also humbly petition that the appellees be required to enter into a stipulation to release them from the supersedeas bonds—they and their sureties—the purpose for which the bonds were given, having been rendered nugatory.

Your petitioners most humbly represent that the changed condition in the circumstances of this appeal bear most heavily upon them.

They used every effort to terminate the supersedeas. They repeatedly offered last summer to submit the cause on printed briefs at the opening day of this term, by which the whole merits of the cause would have probably been passed upon before the present time. They used every effort to have the cause advanced, though the appellees opposed the advancement.

The property is in the hands of some of these same appellees.

The opinion before this Court concedes that no proceeds whatsoever can be derived from the sale. The railroad must, under this decree, be purchased by the appellees. It was to buy, not to sell, that they were so desirous to avoid the supersedeas.

The powers they hold from bondholders are revocoble, and if this Court reversed the judgment, those powers would be revoked. This is the real reason of the motions made by appellees, and of their unwillingness to have the causes heard. (Protest of H. Amy & Co., already filed.)

Of the Million dollars of bonds we represented at Circuit the greater part was given the appellees their power of attorney on account of this very limitation of time to Sept. 1, 1877, to participate in a bond purchase under the present decree.

We only by relying under the advice of counsel on the protection we supposed we had against the terms of sale in the decree, find ourselves disastrously affected—to the extent of losing nearly every dollar of $230,000 of bonds with several years' interest.

Referring to the accompanying papers for details of the above, we, the appellants, most respectfully petition for protection against the oppression of the appellees, inflicted on us without a hearing of our cause before the Supreme Court; and with the above provisions we will gratefully withdraw our appeal.

We further pray that any order made on this petition be without prejudice to our filing bills of review.

MORRIS KETCHUM, and others,

By George Hoadly,
E. H. Grandin,
E. L. Andrews.
Solicitors for Appellants.

Supreme Court of the United States.

MORRIS KETCHUM, et al.,
Appellants,
VS.
W. B. DUNCAN, et al.,
Appellees.

Motion to be Relieved from Supersedeas Bond and to Substitute Participation in Purchase, in lieu of Appellees' Bonds, and for Other Relief.

Pursuant to order affecting Supersedeas of the Terms and Conditions of Sale.

This part of the appeal—from the terms of sale—involved the largest proportion, in fact all, of the appellants' interest. Palpably supersedeas of sale under present decree was absolutely essential to the maintainence of appeal for the purpose of altering the conditions of the sale. That appeal must, therefore, fall under the present order.

The following was the opinion pronounced below on the equities involved in the terms of sale.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT.

Southern District of Alabama.

Opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley.

On the terms of sale and on admitting all the First Mortgage Bondholders of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company to a participation in the purchase of the road and other mortgaged property:

Bondholders secured by a common mortgage have equal rights in the common security, proportional to the amount held by each. If the mortgaged property be sold to a stranger the proceeds are equally distributed and perfect justice is done to all. If bondholders purchase the entire property, they have an equitable right, after satisfying the costs and charges of the litigation and trust, to pay the balance in bonds, so far as their own proportion of such balance extends, for it is to come to them. But it is evident that those who singly, or in combination, hold a large portion of the bonds, have a great advantage over the minority; for they can pay their own proportion of the purchase money, which is much the largest in bonds, and have only a small amount of cash to pay; whilst the minority can only pay a small proportion in bonds, and have a large amount to pay in cash, which, as a generality, they are totally unable to pay. This practically puts it in the power of the majority to get the property at a large sacrifice, and turn the minority off with a mere pittance. This is inequitable, and to be avoided if possible. Perhaps the most equitable mode of disposing of the property (when practicable) when it cannot be sold for cash to an amount sufficient to pay the bondholders, is to decree a strict foreclosure, in which all will participate alike, or to make a sale for the equal benefit of all the bondholders who choose to come in and participate. A strict foreclosure may be attended with difficulties in those States where a mortgage is a mere security and does not give a legal title, besides which, it places the property in the hands of a vast number of beneficiaries whose consent may be very difficult to obtain in perfecting a new organization for conducting the business.

Whilst a sale for the benefit of all is attended with the difficulty of determining who shall make the bid, the court has sometimes authorized the Trustees of the mortgage to bid for the bondholders. In this case, it is obvious that one class or the other of the bondholders would be dissatisfied with any selection of Trustees which the court might make.

To decree that all the bondholders shall be allowed to participate in any sale that may be made, would practically nullify an auction sale. Who would bid on such terms? In this case it has been brought to our notice that a scheme for reorganizing the company, or the interests represented in its property, has been agreed to and subscribed by about 78 per cent. (with interest) of the First Mortgage bondholders. We have examined this scheme, and if not perfectly equitable, we are unable to point out any want of fairness in it. It would give to those who have not joined in it, should they do so, about 20½ per cent. interest in the entire purchase; whilst if all First Mortgage bondholders (including the Tennessee Bonds in the number) were placed on an exact proportionate division, the non-subscribing interest in the purchase would amount to about 21⅝ per cent. But they run the risk of the Tennessee Bonds being placed ahead of the others. If the latter were given the preference, then, subject to that incumbrance, the non-subscribing interest would, by an equal division with the others, take about 24 8-10 per cent. of the purchase, which is probably less advantageous to them than the proposed plan of reorganization would be.

Looking at the difficulties which beset the subject on every side, we think that if we allow the non-subscribing bondholders to participate in the purchase of the property, should it be made in behalf of the mortgage combination, on an equal footing with those who have joined it, that we shall have done all that we can do under the circumstances to protect their interests. The parties representing the reconstruction scheme, through their counsel, have offered to allow them to come in, and to extend the time for doing so until the first of August. We suggest that this time should be extended to the day of sale of the property. We perceive that the Trustees have the power to do this—and keep the agreement on foot by extending the time sixty days at a time. We have, therefore, proposed an additional proviso to the decree to carry out this view. We hope that it will be acceded to by the counsel for the complainants and those representing the reconstruction schemes. We do not wish to dictate these terms to the parties who propose to purchase, but suggest that, in our judgment, the interest of all parties would be subserved by an arrangement of this sort. [The counsel for the complainants having suggested that it was very desirable, if the plan of reconstruction should be generally adopted, to avoid any sale at all, and proposing to extend the time for other bondholders to come to an arrangement, to the 1st of September, the Court adopted that modification, and announced that the decree would be made accordingly unless very forcible objections to it should be presented at to-morrow's session of the court.]

Woods, Circuit Judge, concurring.

The following are our assignments of error presenting the grounds of our appeal from the decree of sale on the terms ordered by the above opinion.

Assignment of Errors.

Against terms of sale as ordered in the Alabama decree.

First. That the Masters should not have been directed to receive on the sale any commodity, such as bonds, in lieu of lawful money, except by consent of all the cestuis que trust represented before the Court, or for the equal benefit of all the bondholders, according to their holdings.

That the Masters should have been directed not to receive the bond bid, except for the amount of the foreclosing mortgage or some other reasonable amount, as a minimum upset price, in order that the bondholders not desirous of becoming purchasers of the property might not be deprived of all substantial share of the proceeds of the sale by a nominal bid, under the terms of this decree.

That the Master should have been directed not to receive bonds, in lieu of cash, for any greater value than the dividend such bonds would be entitled to receive from the proceeds of sale. They should not have been directed to be received at their face value under the decree allowing the use of bonds as bid-money.

That a trustee should have been ordered to bid for the property for the benefit of all the bondholders alike.

That the time for participation by all the first-mortgage bondholders in the bond-bid should not have been limited to a shorter period than the time which is necessary to prosecute an appeal to the Supreme Court, so that the appellants might not, by exercising their right of appeal, lose even those equities secured to them by the decree, in order to provide for their unquestioned interests in the property.

The question regarding the all-important terms of sale as shown by the above, was fully raised at Circuit.

The pleadings alleged all that was possible of being alleged on the subject treated in the above opinion. The mortgage providing for terms of sale was attached to bills, and contained a sufficient reference to the question.

Dunham vs. Railway Co., 1 Wall., 258, 268.

It was impossible to predict exactly what terms of sale the court would order and to plead in regard to them beforehand. As the terms on which a Chancery Court will grant the general relief prayed cannot be within the legitimate scope of pleadings, this court has frequently reversed decrees for errors apparent in the terms of sale or redemption without reference to the pleadings.

Clark vs. Reyburn, 8 Wall., 318.
Noonan vs. Lee, 2 Black, 500–509.

But in this case no objection in regard to the pleadings was suggested below, and the case was fully tried in regard to the terms of sale resulting in the above decision.

Appeal must fall with loss of supersedeas.

Equities of Bondholders Dissentiug from a Plan of Compromise of the Debts of a Railroad Corporation.

Our position when the decree was rendered was this:

By submitting to the terms of sale, we would have got $440,000 for our million.

By appealing from these terms, we expected to save $560,000, and secure our full claim or obligation for it.

As such appeal related to the conditions of purchase of the property on execution, manifestly it would be a fruitless appeal unless we superseded.

The object of the appeal was to alter the inequitable conditions of sale and purchase, so that there would be substantial proceeds for all the bondholders.

The sale has been ordered to proceed under the decree as it now stands, and the most important portion of our appeal will be lost by the execution ordered. We now seek only to save those equities which the decree below gave.

The opinion of Mr. Justice BRADLEY recognized that the property would necessarily be purchased by the party having the greatest number of bonds and for a pittance.

The road could not be sold for as much as the mortgage upon it.

As by the decree the bonds were as good as money for bidding purposes, and as this new bidding medium was of a definite and limited circulation, the parties holding the most bonds would necessarily become purchasers of the property.

As the whole object of giving the bondholders the power of bidding in bonds, was to benefit and protect them, and protect them all alike; the discussion below turned upon the terms of the decree by which that result conld be attained. As any one intending to purchase the railroad, could see by the term of the decree providing for bidding in bonds, that it would be useless for him to attempt to compete with the bonholders, the so-called sale would degenerate into a mere transfer of of the property to the holders of the greatest number of bonds.

As it would be to their interest to bid as small a sum as possible, in order, that they might have to pay only an infinitesimal dividend to the dissenting bondholders, they would bid merely enough to cover the costs. This has been the practical result under all such decrees.

Justice Bradley, therefore, while according this use of for (44) forty-four cents on the dollar for our present bonds, by not appealing, and by yielding to the terms of sale before September 1. We did not surrender our bonds on these conditions, because with our appeal and supersedeas of the execution we believed we could have the terms of sale and the priorities of lien so adjusted as to produce us far more than forty-four per cent. Now, deprived of all chance of benefitting by correction of the errors in the terms of sale—inasmuch as the property will be sold under the present decree—we are left without the alternative offered by the decree. Our predicament is that we are without the benefits of the appeal or of the equities of the decree.

Any further pursuit of this appeal—without the equity reserved to us in the decree of participating in the bond purchase—would be an endeavor to save six per cent. on the coupons of 1874, and thirty per cent. ou the Tennessee claims, while we lost the (64) sixty-four cents by the execution of the present terms of sale; or rather under the terms of security in the appellees' bonds we would lose every dollar of our conceded share of the property.

We therefore respectfully petition the court that an order be passed requiring the appellees to admit us into the scheme of purchase on equal terms with the other first-mortgage bondholders. With this small measure of justice saved to the appellants the appellees need not give any bond. The appellants feel compelled to relinquish the bond for this substitute on account of the following reasons:

Because the condition of the bond renders it valueless—to pay us the difference between our dividend from the proceeds of sale under the present decree, and what our dividend, under the same terms of sale, would be without distribution to the coupons of 1874. This is totally inoperative.

The principal part of our appeal was taken from the terms of sale because they were so erroneous and inequitable that the sale would produce only a nominal result. See opinion of Bradley J. The bond gives us the difference between our cash share of the nominal proceeds of sale under the present decree, with or without the coupons. With their monopoly of the sale, the appellees would take good care that a very nominal sum should be bid for the road, so that our recovery on the bond would be nil. See Opinion supra. Practically, the condition of the bond is: To pay us the difference between our share of proceeds, which are nothing, and what that share would be if the coupons of 1874 are decided to have no claim to participate in that nothing.

Further, because if the bondsmen, even under a bond with operative conditions, become insolvent after the sale and before hearing in this court, we will have lost all security and this court will have no power to help us, unless the Circuit Court be ordered to retain control of the property until hearing in this court.

The appellants are thus driven by the loss of the supersedeas to surrender their appeal. The only means of saving anything whatever is to submit to the inequitable terms of the sale now ordered to execution and surrender their bonds to the appellees, unless the Court should make the following Orders Necessary for Saving Appellants' Rights.

The sale of the property should be expressly subject to the lien of the appellants' bonds, instead of any personal security to them.

Or a money or U. S. bond deposit should be for the full amount of the appellants claim, principal, interest and costs. And should be conditioned to pay them that amount absolutely upon the success of the appeal. If we should fail in the appeal, then, under [illegible] of [illegible]

The [illegible]

[illegible]

Clifford

Supreme Court of the U. S.

MORRIS KETCHUM, Trustee, et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM B. DUNCAN, et al.,
Appellees.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Southern District of New York. } ss.

Egbert H. Grandin, Counsellor-at-Law, of the City of Mobile, in the State of. Alabama, being duly sworn, saith:

That on the fourteenth day of January, A. D., 1878, in said City of Mobile, whilst affiant was acting as one of the counsel of said Morris Ketchum, appellant, and was about to make a motion before the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, which said court has the custody of the trust fund in said entitled cause, for the refunding of said Ketchum of the expenses of the execution of his said trust, affiant was served with a notice issuing out of the Court of Chancery of the State of Alabama, at Mobile, Alabama, in the words and figures following, to wit:

"IN CHANCERY, AT MOBILE, ALABAMA.
3594.

HAYS, DUPUY, et al.
vs.
MORRIS KETCHUM, et al.
} At Rules,
Register's Office.
Mobile, Jan. 14, 1878.

In this cause the complainants, under the terms of the decree rendered on the 19th of December, 1877, having taken an appeal from said decree and for the reinstatement of the injunction, as provided by said decree, and having filed these bonds with sureties in the sum of two thousand dollars, to the effect that said injunction stand in full force, notice is hereby issued to E. H. Grandin, Esq., counsel for respondents, and to Morris Ketchum, respondent, that said appeal has been taken, that said bond has been filed, and that said injunction is reinstated.

JOSEPH HODGSON,
Register.

Affiant further saith, that the said injunction which he was so notified, was reinstated, was, and is an injunction restraining affiant and all other counsel for said Morris Ketchum, trustee, and said Ketchum, himself, from making any motion or taking any proceedings in the cause of Morris Ketchum, Trustee vs. The Mobile & Ohio R. R. Co., et als., in the said Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama.

Affiant further saith, that upon and after the service upon him, as aforesaid, of said notice, he refrained from making the said contemplated motion, and that the Hon. S. F. Rice, who was engaged with affiant to make said motion, refused to make the same pending said injunction.

Affiant further saith, that the suit in which said injunction was ordered, was brought in the said Chancery Court at Mobile, to carry into execution a decree of the Confederate Court of Chancery, at Mobile in 1863, which decree said Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama had pronounced null and void.

Affiant further saith, that the bill in said suit in the Chancery Court at Mobile, was dismissed by the Chancellor, but complainants appealed from his decree of dismissal and the injunction, was restored as appears by the aforesaid recited notice.

E. H. Grandin.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, this 13th February, 1878.
Daniel W. Gillett,
[SEAL.]
Notary Public,
New York City and County.

Clifford

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

Further Brief for Appellees on Motions noticed for hearing for Feb. 18, 1878, and adjourned to Feb. 22, 1878.

F. N. BANGS,
For Appellees.

NEW YORK:
EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 BROADWAY, COR. FULTON STREET.
1878.

U. S. Supreme Court.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL., Appellants, vs. WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN ET AL., Appellees.	October Term, 1877 —No. 879.

In this case, this court, on December 10, 1877, made an order in the following terms:

On consideration of the motion to dismiss this appeal and of the argument of counsel thereupon had, as well in support of as against the same, it is ordered that said motion be and the same is hereby denied.

And it is further ordered that the operation of the supersedeas arising upon this appeal be so far suspended as to allow sale to be made of the mortgaged premises, in pursuance of the decree below; and that the commissioners appointed to make the sale conduct the same, in all respects as directed by the decree, except that the portion or share of the proceeds which would enure to the benefit of the appellants by the reversal of the decree, so far as it sustains the validity of the coupons of 1874, be paid in cash to the commissioners and by them into the registry of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama, to await the disposition of this appeal and the further order of the court thereon.

Afterwards, on the 14th day of January, 1878, this Court made an order as follows:

Supreme Court of the United States.—No. 879.—October Term, 1877.—Morris Ketchum et al., appellants, vs. Wm. Butler Duncan et al.

Upon the petition of William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. Haskins DuPuy and William Butler Duncan, sworn to January 5th, 1878, and on motion of Mr. Merrick (counsel, for the appellants, appearing and not opposing), it is, this 14th day of January, ordered by the court that this appeal, so far as it respects D'Orelli Ziegler and Bernard de Watteville, and so far as it respects the bonds formerly held by them, and so far as it respects the bonds formerly held by Cephise Chuffard, numbered respectively 953, 1208, 2215, 3491, 4054, 5193, 4194, 4195, 4196 and 5514 be, and the same is hereby discontinued; and that the names of the said Bernard de Watteville and D'Orelli Ziegler be stricken from the record as appellants on this appeal; and that a minute be made of record on this appeal, in this court, that said petitioners, Hays, Pierson and DuPuy, have succeeded to the rights of the said Bernard de Watteville and D'Orelli Ziegler, respectively, as creditors under said mortgage, and to the rights of the said Cephise Chuffard, as a creditor under said mortgage upon the said ten bonds last hereinabove mentioned. 14th January, 1878.

True copy.

[SEAL.] Test. D. W. MIDDLETON.
Clerk Supreme Court, U. S.

A motion made by the remaining appellants to rescind the above order of December 10th, 1877, was heard by the court on the same 14th of January, 1878; and on the 11th of February, 1878, the court made the following order:

Morris Ketchum et. al., appellants, vs. Wm. Butler Duncan et. al.

On consideration of the motion to rescind the order suspending the operation of the supersedeas in this cause, and the argument of counsel thereupon had, as well in support of as against the same,

It is ordered that the Circuit Court proceed with the execution of the decree appealed from, upon Hays, Pierson and Du Puy filing in this court a bond payable to the United States in the penal sum of seventy-five thousand dollars, with security to be approved by this court, conditioned to pay to the appellants and those whom they, or either of them, legally represent in the appeal, the difference between the amounts which they would respectively receive from the proceeds of the sale, in case the disputed coupons of 1874 are on this appeal disallowed as a part of the mortgage debt, and the amounts they will receive if the mortgaged property shall be sold and distributed under the decree as it stands. February 11th, 1878.

True copy.

[L.S.] Test. D. W. MIDDLETON,
Clerk Supreme Court U. S.

This order was certified to the Circuit Court, and entered of record there.

The remaining appellants then gave to the counsel for the appellees notice of a motion, as follows:

Supreme Court of the United States.—Morris Ketchum et al., appellants, vs. W. B. Duncan et al., appellees.

Take notice that on Monday, February 18th, 1878, we will move the Supreme Court of the United States for an order:—Requiring money, in lieu of a personal bond, to be deposited on the vacation of the supersedeas; requiring the amount of the money deposit, or of the bond, to be, at least, $229,000 or $600,000; requiring provision to be made out of the fund for the expenses of trust; requiring the appellees to give a release of the supersedeas bonds.

New York, February 12th, 1878.

E. L. ANDREWS,
Solicitor for Appellants.

On the return day of this notice, counsel for the residuary appellants appeared in court and produced a brief, into which was incorporated a petition containing a confused mass of prayers, suggestions and innuendoes, which it is as difficult for the reader to analyze as it appears to have been for the author to express intelligibly.

One design of the appellants appears to be to put the appellees' counsel to the trouble of drawing at least one brief per diem in relation to some matter connected with this appeal.

It may be that by the time this comes from the press it will have become obsolete, or subjected to the operation of an implied supersedeas, by the production of some new effort emanating from the imagination, or the fancy, or the recklessness, of the other side. Subject to that risk, the undersigned proceeds to reply to the brief and petition of the appellants' counsel, without making any reference to the careless and unverified statements which he understands were made outside of the brief and petition, on the oral argument delivered in this court, without previous notice of its scope or extent, on February 18th.

I.—The appeal was originally taken in the names of Ketchum, Merian, Renevier, Jump, Chavannes, Carrard, Chuffard, De Watteville, and Ziegler. Of these appellants, Ketchum had no personal interest whatever, and the aggregate amount of sterling bonds held by the other appellants was $186,000, namely: Merian, $9,000; Renevier, $5,000; Carrard, $12,000; Chuffard, $14,000; Jump, $14,000; Chavannes, $17,000; Ziegler, $18,000; and De Watteville, $97,000. (See depositions of Messrs. Moran, filed Feb. 18, fols. 23, 35, 40, 62, 271, 281 to 285.) The only interest which either of these parties had was, to reverse so much of the decree as permitted coupons of 1874 to be received by the Masters in payment for the mortgaged property. As this could not possibly injure either of the appellants to an amount exceeding six per cent. upon the amount of his bonds, the aggregate amount of such injury could not exceed $11,160. But, since the appeal was taken, the bonds held by Ziegler have been assigned to Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, three of the appellees; and since the order of December 10th was made, all the bonds held by De Wattevelle, and ten of those held by Chuffard, have been also assigned to the same appellees. The actual ownership of the remaining appellants, therefore, does not exceed $61,000. The aggregate amount which they have at stake, altogether, does not exceed $3,660, and the largest interest of any one of them does not exceed $1,020. These facts appear by the affidavit of Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, and are cognizable by the court on a motion to dismiss the appeal or to vacate the supersedeas.

19 Howard, 108, Rogers v. The St. Charles.
23 How., 483, Clifton v. Sheldon.
3 Otto, 44, Terry v. Hatch.

A corporation called the Rogers Locomotive and Machine Works, as a second mortgage bondholder, reinforced the residuary appellants by joining in their motion to vacate the order of December 10th. That corporation, however, is not an appellant, and it has no rights which the appellants have not—perhaps not even the right to say that it took no appeal because it relied on the will and ability of some one else to stay the execution of the decree.

An affidavit of Charles Moran was produced in aid of the appellants. He intervened in the suit in the court below by proving his bonds. He only owned forty or fifty bonds. (See his deposition, fol. 267, q. 750 to q. 780.) The bonds held by the appellants were proved in his name. But he acquiesced in the decree. He did not appeal. Those whose bonds had been proved in his name separated from him, and appealed in their own names. He no longer represents them, nor do they represent him.

II.—In 10 Wallace, 296, The Slaughter House Cases, the court recognized the fact, well authenticated by the text books and reports, that "independently of statutory regulations, the term supersedeas has little or no application in equity suits, as the rule is well settled in the English courts that an appeal in chancery does not stop the proceedings under the decree from which the appeal was taken without the special order of the subordinate court."

In the expression of his views given in 10 Wallace, pp. 298 and 299, Mr. Justice Bradley puts his dissent from the judgment of the court upon the grounds that such judgment has the effect of leaving many classes of judgments and decrees in equity, though appealed from, entirely effective and operative between the parties, and that such judgment remits the practice on this subject back to the practice of the English Courts of Equity, in which it is conceded that an appeal does not suspend proceedings nor act as a supersedeas on the proceedings in the court appealed from.

This being the admitted condition of things, independently of the acts of Congress, the question is, what effect have the acts of Congress upon an appeal in equity? Does the allowance of such an appeal, by virtue of any statutory regulation, and without special order, operate as a supersedeas?

By the language of the original statute relating to appeals in equity (2 Stat., 244, sect. 2) such appeals were made "subject to the same rules, regulations and restrictions as are prescribed in law in case of writs of error."

In 3 Otto, 87, Kitchen vs. Randolph, this court stated that at common law a writ of error was a supersedeas by implication. The court then proceeded to show that the acts of Congress, instead of enlarging, limited the operation of the writ in that respect. Its effectiveness as a supersedeas was made to depend upon a compliance with certain prescribed conditions as to time and security.

When, therefore, appeals in equity were made subject to the same "rules, regulations and restrictions as are prescribed in law in case of writs of error," there was nothing in the enactment which dispensed with the necessity of obtaining a stay by order. This language only superadded other conditions, to wit, those of time and security, which were required in cases of writs of error. Neither the legislation as to writs of error, nor that as to appeals, enlarged the operation of the writ or of the appeal. On the contrary, it restricted it.

The present legislation on the subject, contained in sections 1,007 and 1,012 of the Revised Statutes, the former relating to security upon writs of error, and the latter applying to appeals in equity the "same rules, regulations and restrictions which are prescribed in law in case of writs of error" has no different effect. This legislation is not enabling but restrictive. This is manifestly so, if the word "appeal" is substituted for "writ of error," in section 1,007. That would make it read thus: "In any case where an allowance of an appeal may be a supersedeas," that is in cases where it is made so by a special order, "the appellant may obtain a supersedeas" by complying with the additional conditions prescribed.

In the case at bar, the operation of the allowance of an appeal was not left to be ascertained by implication. It was specially ordered to operate as a supersedeas.

III.—But conceding that some stay or supersedeas upon an appeal in equity does arise by implication, without special order, the next question which arises is, does the implied stay, in every case, necessarily extend to the whole decree?

Certainly, it cannot be pretended that there is any statute of the United States which enacts in terms that the execution of a decree for the collection of an indebtedness of $9,000,000 shall be stayed by the filing of a bond for $100,000.

The language of the Revised Statutes is that where an appeal may be a supersedeas, the defendant may obtain such supersedeas by complying with certain conditions. Literally, the privilege is confined to the "defendant;" but "defendant" must mean "aggrieved party," otherwise a plaintiff or an intervenor could not appeal. At the outset, a literal construction of the statute in this respect must be abandoned in deference to its good sense and to the necessities of justice. Construing its remaining words in the same spirit, the obvious intent is that the aggrieved party shall have, whether expressly or by implication is not material, a stay or supersedeas commensurate only with his grievance, and not one extending beyond that grievance.

IV.—This court has power to determine the extent of the implied stay which aggrieved parties have obtained, if they have obtained it only by implication, and to review any express order of the court below, granting a stay, if the stay has been granted by express order.

This proposition, it is observed, does not involve any question as to the time or propriety of exercising the power. It is an abstract affirmation of the existence of the power. The question of the time when the power should be exercised, and of the propriety of exercising it at this time, is discussed hereafter.

That the court has power to determine, not merely the merits of an appeal, but the right of a party to assume the attitude of an appellant, and to be heard upon the merits of a decree, can hardly be denied. Courts of Chancery have refused to hear a so-called appellant, either because he was not aggrieved by the decree, or because he was estopped from appealing by his conduct or by the record, or because he had consented to the decree, or even because he had raised no question in the court below, or had omitted to assign errors. It is always an inquiry with the court, preliminarily, whether the appellant has not divested himself of legal capacity to take an appeal.

That a party consenting to a decree divests himself of legal capacity to appeal from it, see

2 Vesey, sen., 488, Harrison vs. Rumsey.
Ambler, 229, Bradish vs. Gee.
5 Johns. Ch. 564, French vs. Shotwell.
20 Johns., 668, same case.
12 John, 521, Monell vs. Laurence.
4 Paige, 476, Leitch vs. Cumpston.
1 Cowen, 709, Atkinson vs. Marks.
2 Woods, 628, Anderson vs. R. R. Co.
8 Dana, 12, Story vs. Hawkins.

That a party whose legal rights are not affected by a decree is devoid of capacity—is legally incompetent—to appeal from it, see

6 Wallace, 639, Crawshay vs. Soutter.
7 Paige, 221, Hone vs. Van Schaick.
10 Id., 426, Card vs. Bird.

That a partial incompetency, or incapacity, may exist, that is, that the incapacity may relate to a portion of the decree, while it does not extend to the remainder, see

6 Paige, 274, Cuyler vs. Moreland.
7 Id., 18, Mills vs. Hoag.
43* (not 43) N. Y. (2 Keys), 123, Hackley vs. Hope.

That a party who has availed himself of pending litigation for his own benefit has divested himself of legal capacity to set up a claim in opposition to the theory on which that litigation is based, see

2 Woods, 323, Forbes vs. R. R. Co.
Id., 628, Anderson vs. R. R. Co.
13 Blatchford, 312, Stevens vs. R. R. Co.

That a party who has omitted to raise a particular question in the court below has divested himself of the legal capacity to raise that question here, and that this principle is "founded not only on the nature of the jurisdiction of the court, but on principles of great importance to the due administration of justice in all courts," see

5 Wend., 673, Wood vs. Young.

That an objection for want of equity cannot be, for the first time, raised on appeal, see

2 N. Y., 498, Clark vs. Sawyer.

That an objection in abatement of the action, on the ground of plaintiff's defective legal capacity, can not be for the first time raised on appeal, see

17 Barb., 414, Baldwin vs. McArthur.
34 Id., 66, Mosselman vs. Caen.
36 Id., 392, Paige vs. Fazackerly.

That where only one question has been decided by the court below, this court is deaf to the hearing of any other question, although all parties agree to ask it, see

1 Peters, 621, McDonald vs. Smalley.

That this court gives no attention to claims omitted to be made in the court below, see

10 Wheaton, 431, The Santa Maria.
1 How., 169, Bell vs. Bruen.
3 How., 692, Brockett vs. Brockett.
8 How., 402, West vs. Smith.
18 Id., 557, United States vs. Larkin.
18 Id., 289, Kinsman vs. Parkhurst.
20 Id., 45, Hudgins vs. Kemp.

That a party's conduct in the court below may estop him from appealing, see 3 Otto, 39, Terry vs Abraham, per Mr. Justice Miller.

But the power to determine the legal, or lawful, dimensions of an appeal, and the legal, or lawful, capacity of an appellant to appeal, involves the power to determine his right to a stay. If his appeal is dismissed unheard, his stay goes with it by necessary implication, and it is in effect determined that he never ought to have had a stay.

In short the inherent (not expressly statutory) power of this court, as a Court of Appeal, to decide a party's right to be heard, conveys with it the inherent power to determine his right to a stay until he is heard.

The uniform practice of the court proves that it possesses the power, preliminarily, to determine what is the extent of the stay implied (in cases where it is implied at all) by the proceedings in the court below. It has exercised the power in specific cases, and by general rule.

In 9 Wheaton, 553, Corbett vs. Brodie, this court reviewed the action of the court below in fixing the amount of the security, and ordered the cause to be dismissed until the plaintiff in error gave security sufficient to cover the whole amount of the judgment. The court, in effect, decided that the proceedings in the court below should no longer imply a stay, and never should have raised such an implication.

In 16 Howard, 135, Stafford vs. The Union Bank of Louisiana, this court, upon the same principle, required security for the whole amount of the decree, although the suit was a foreclosure suit, and the mortgaged property was in the hands of a Receiver.

In 19 Howard, 375, Roberts vs. Cooper, this court, upon the same principle, stated that the party claiming its intervention should have the full benefit of the security intended by the law, in a case where the writ of error was a supersedeas.

In 6 Wallace, 375, Rubber Company vs. Goodyear, decided at December Term, 1867, this court held that after the allowance of an appeal, the question of the sufficiency of an appeal bond became cognizable here; and in view of the fact that some security had been deposited in the court below before the taking of the appeal, this court held, in substance, that an appeal bond in a smaller amount would have been sufficient to raise an implied stay, or to justify an express stay.

At the term of December, 1867, this court promulgated its present 29th rule (6 Wallace, v.). By the making of the rule this court assumed to have inherent control over the whole subject of supersedeas and security; and the latter part of the rule seems designed to mitigate, if not prevent, the hardships which might arise from enforcing the rigid direction given in 16 Howard, 135, Stafford vs. The Union Bank.

If the latter part of rule 29 had not been in force, the Circuit Court, in this case, might and must have exacted security for the whole amount of the debt established by the decree. It was relieved from doing so by a general direction from this court that certain observances, in certain cases, should imply a stay, or authorize an express stay by order.

But rule 29 is not an Act of Congress, inflexible and imperative. It is a rule of court. The same power which enacted it can repeal or suspend it, or except a case from its operation, or declare how far it is available to a party seeking the benefit of it (U. S. vs. Breitling, 20 How., 252). If it is found that in a given case it is resorted to for the purpose of inflicting upon the appellee hardships from which the rule itself was designed to exempt the appellant, this court can abrogate it, pro hac vice, and so administer it that it shall not operate beyond what the justice of the case requires, or may limit the stay implied or granted.

In 12 Wallace, 99, French vs. Shoemaker, this Court again declared it to be within its discretion to increase or diminish the amount of the bond, and to require additional sureties, or otherwise, as justice may require, so as to modify or limit the extent of an implied or express supersedeas. This involves the right to determine how far the security already given shall avail the appellant, or, in other words, to what extent and to what end it shall be deemed " good and sufficient."

In 21 Wallace, 31, Jerome vs. McCarter, the Court asserted its power to consider whether upon a change in the circumstances of the case, or of the parties, or of the sureties, the implication of a stay should continue any longer, although it at the same time announced that it would regard the action of the court below as to the "goodness and sufficiency" of the security at the time it was taken and as to the value of the property, the penalty of the bond, and the damage likely to be sustained by the appellee, as final. This however, does not involve an abandonment on the part of this court, of its power to suspend its own rules, or to except a particular case from their operation, in order to avoid injustice and oppression, or to determine the legal effect of the proceeding in the court below. It only remits to the court below the power of passing on the form of the bond, the responsibility of the sureties and the value of the property.

If the stay in the case at bar arose under a special order of the Circuit Court, then, under the provisions of sec. 701 of the Revised Statutes, this court has express authority to affirm, modify or reverse such order.

V.—If, because this, in form, is an appeal from the whole decree, the court cannot look into its substance and legal efficacy and distinguish its essence from its external appearance, but must consider the execution of every part of the whole decree as expressly or impliedly superseded, at the arbitrary will of a party claiming to be aggrieved, yet the court has, under sec. 701 of the Revised Statutes, power, pending the appeal, to "direct such judgment, decree or order to be rendered, or such further proceedings to be had as justice may require."

The application of this section has been strongly enforced and copiously illustrated in a brief of my learned associate, the Hon. John A. Campbell, heretofore filed in this cause. But I may, without presumption, be permitted to add something to what he has observed.

In cases of this description, the court takes the property in dispute out of the hands of the parties, and deprives them of all direct control over it and its revenues.

If the taking of an appeal is matter of right, and if a stay, auxiliary to an appeal, upon very small security, is also matter of right, then either that stay, at the will of a party, petrifies or freezes the case and the fund inflexibly into the status which they have at the time of the taking of the appeal, beyond the power of anybody or anything (except Divine Providence) to control it, or, from necessity, the court which has adopted the foundling, must, in the exercise of a sound discretion, to be adapted to the emergency according to legal and equitable principles, employ its paternal right and authority for the benefit of the claimants. In 4 Otto, 672, Goddard vs. Ordway, the court announced the possession of that power and authority, and the propriety of exercising it in suitable cases. This springs from the necessity and fitness of things, and from the express powers conferred upon the court.

Then, in what case can the power to dispose of the property for its own preservation be more fitly exercised than in a case where the rights of nearly all the parties are fixed beyond recall, and only a small sum is in dispute?

And how can it be more fitly exercised than by putting the property where it must ultimately go—where its going is only a question of time, that is, in the hands of purchasers, and then distributing the proceeds among those who are conceded to own them, to the extent to which such ownership is conceded, and reserving the remainder for the security of those who are disputants over it? If the right and duty of the court are commensurate with the control which it has taken from the parties, and assumed for itself, then when it is asked to do what is above suggested, it is asked to do no more than its jurisdiction permits and its justice dictates.

VI.—It was proper to apply to this court, at an early stage of the case here, to declare to what extent an implied stay had arisen from the proceedings in the court below, or to what extent an express stay was justified by the character of the litigation and the relation of the appellants to it.

A stay or supersedeas belongs to the same class of preliminary, precautionary, or provisional remedies, to which injunctions, attachments and receiverships belong. These are interlocutory in their nature, intended only for the security of a party in the final enjoyment of his right when he establishes it. But no court would make an attachment, injunction, receivership, or other cautionary remedy, broader than the grievance for which final redress is sought. No other court having, as this has, original jurisdiction to control the scope of a provisional remedy, would refuse to consider, preliminarily, the question whether the preliminary remedy does not exceed the possible bounds of the relief finally sought. Every court having such jurisdiction, considers itself bound, ex debito justitiæ, to consider whether, by those interlocutory remedies which anticipate the final judgment, needless wrong is not done. It would be matter of great ragret to find that a court, by a mere rule of order, had abnegated the duty of ascertaining whether its merely cautionary process was not being abused to the great detriment of innocent parties.

VII.—In the case at bar, the appeal of Ketchum and his co-appellants, is, in intendment of law, a nullity as to all parts of the decree, except those which are in favor of the coupon holder. The appeal has vitality only as against the latter.

Ketchum, if he were a trustee, as he is not, would have no right of appeal.

3 Otto, 412, Sage vs. R. R. Co.

As to the other appellants, the case is a simple one. It is, that certain parties, claiming to be aggrieved in that some $4,000, which should be distributed in small fragments among them, has been awarded to some one else as a coupon holder, have stayed the enjoyment, by bondholders to the amount of some $14,000,000, whose rights are not the subject of dispute, of those acknowledged rights. The appellants do not complain that those bondholders have obtained anything which they are not entitled to ; and those bondholders are themselves satisfied with the decree. As to them, the decree cannot be reversed, either for their benefit or to their disadvantage. Nothing can be done by this court after years of delay but to give to the appellants $4,000, and that not out of the pockets of the bondholders who are stayed, but out of the pockets of coupon holders who are willing to secure the appellants against all chance of loss. If the decree below is found to be erroneous, the utmost this court can do is to award to the appellants themselves (and not to the anonymous " others," whom, without proof, they claim to represent), for distribution in small proportions, the same share of the proceeds of sale which they would receive in case the coupons of 1874 were wholly disallowed.

This result can be amply secured to them without injustice to others ; and unnecessary delay in the enjoyment of an acknowledged legal right is injustice.

Can there be any doubt that this is a case calling for the exercise of whatever power the court possesses? Can any bond be adequate compensation to a party against the deprivation of a present, existing, undenied, and undeniable right to millions of dollars?

In every other respect than as it affects coupon holders, the appeal is void, for want of legal capacity in the appellants to take it, as much so as if they had been infants, or under some other disability. They not only admitted the rights of the other bondholders, but brought suit to enforce those rights. The decree, as a decree of sale, for the benefit of bondholders, is their own progeny.

Some of the numerous cases in which parties have been held to have divested themselves, by their acts or omissions in the court below, of the right to appeal, so as absolutely to close the ears of the appellate court against them, or in which they have been held never to have acquired the right to be heard, except, at best, within defined limits, are above referred to. The most recent one is that of Terry vs. Abraham, 3 Otto, 49.

Tested by those cases, the only general feature of this controversy which this court has lawful authority even to look at is, that it is a controversy over several small sums, amounting in the aggregate to less than $4,000, between a few bondholders and the holders of the coupons of 1874.

The right of the appellees, as couponholders, to enforce the decree against the bondholders who have not appealed has not been intercepted by any means which the law approves or allows.

16 Peters, 521, Todd vs. Daniel.

The right of the appellees, as bondholders, to enforce the decree against the debtor and the junior incumbrancers, and as against all other bondholders, has not been intercepted by any means which the law allows or approves, because no one questioned that right in the court below, or has legal capacity, or is legally competent, to question it here.

The right of the appellees, as bondholders, to enforce the decree against themselves, as couponholders, is a right which can be questioned by themselves alone.

The right of the appellees, as couponholders and bondholders, to enforce the decree against the now remaining appellants has not been intercepted, because the now remaining appellants have not enough at stake to entitle them to maintain an appeal; or, if that is not so, then the right of the appellees to enforce the decree has been intercepted to the extent of only $4,000. As to everything else, they are free from any lawful restraint; and the orders made by this court on December 10, 1877, and January 14, 1878, have done no more than permit them to use their own property, under the limitation that, in using it, they should do no injury to others.

VIII.—It was contended by the now surviving appellants that they might be injured by the execution of the decree in its present shape, because of the situation of so much of the property as lies within the State of Tennessee.

The facts on that subject are before the Court in the record and on the affidavits.

A part of the mortgaged property, 118 miles in length, is in Tennessee. This part is subject to an indebtedness, now amounting to some $2,000,000, secured by mortgage to Iselin, Wilson & Duncan as trustees. It is or was a question whether that mortgage is prior or subordinate to the lien of the mortgage in question on this appeal. But Hays, Pierson & Dupuy hold all the $2,000,000 of indebtedness, except about $60,000, and they hold about 90% of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage in question here. It is of but little importance to them which mortgage has priority over the other, and if it were not for the opposition of the appellants, the whole property might be sold together under both mortgages. The attitude of the appellants will compel a separate sale of the Tennessee portion; and they now urge this as a reason why the remainder of the property should not be sold until the priority of the two mortgages, as between each other, shall have been determined.

The answer to this is that they are themselves responsible for whatever difficulty exists in this respect, and that the appeal involves no question on the subject. The bill of Duncan and Elliot did not bring in the Tennessee bondholders nor their representatives as defendants; yet the appellants Merian, Renevier, Carrard, Chuffard, Jump and Chavannes proved their claims in the Duncan and Elliot suit, and so became promoters of a sale in that suit. Ketchum, however, in his bill, and Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump and Chavannes in their bill, did bring in the trustees of the Tennessee bondholders as defendants, and ask a determination of their rights. But, on June 5, 1877, the consolidation order was made by consent, whereby the consolidated cause was directed to proceed, without prejudice to and saving, the rights of Wilson, Iselin, and Duncan; and then on the next day, an order was made, by consent of all parties, striking the names of the Tennessee trustees from the bills on the ground of want of jurisdiction over their persons, and want of jurisdiction over the subject matter. Here, again, the insinuation of error is met by proof of consent. At all events, the emergency created by the obstinacy and folly of the appellants has been provided for without injustice to them or the appellees.

IX.—It was also insinuated by the appellants that in case the decree below should be enforced pending the appeal, they might be injured, because this court might, on the determination of the appeal, give them further time to contribute to the expense of, and share in the benefit arising from, a purchase by others of the mortgaged property. How much damage they would sustain by being excluded from that privilege it is impossible to say; but it is submitted that in the particular in question, they have no right to a hearing here. They have no legal right to anything but their share, as creditors, of the price bid on the sale by the purchaser. Beyond that, what the decree contained was matter of favor, inserted by consent.

Any attempt by a court to make $100,000 equal to $5,000,000 would be manifestly futile. While an interest is, although small, within the protection of the law as much as a large one, yet in the practical administration of a property or a fund, a large proprietor has, and must have, lawfully, a preponderating influence. His rights are of the same quality as, and no better than, his remedies are as effectual as, and no more so than, those of the small proprietor. But his power of purchase is greater, because his resources are larger, and because, by law, a dollar will buy more than a penny. There is nothing inequitable, unjust, or unlawful in his using what he has, to buy what a less fortunate possessor cannot buy at all. In a partition sale, the apportionment of a trust fund, or a sale under foreclosure, the largest owner has a lawful advantage of which the court cannot, by any machinery, deprive him. If partners are forced on him, he may dissolve the partnership, and then his disparity of interest must, because by law it is entitled to, tell in his favor.

The appellants elected to stand on what they regarded as their legal right to an appeal and a stay, as being worth more to them than the privilege of uniting with the appellees in a purchase of the property. It turns out now that the privilege offered them was of more value than the legal right on which they insisted, and they wish to revoke their choice. But they cannot restore the appellees to the position which the latter would have occupied if the appellants had not appealed.

There is, therefore, no reason to believe that this court can or will interfere with the portion of the decree in question. The appellants have said that the appellees shall have nothing more than their legal rights. It is not to be assumed that the court will reverse a decree in order to give the appellants anything more than their legal rights.

If it should come to the knowledge of the court that a party of capitalists had raised a sum of money and formed a partnership to buy the road, and had invited all bondholders to come in with them, and some bondholders had refused, while most had consented, would the court say that the recusants had a legal right to become partners? And would the court, beyond seeing that the sale was fairly made, and that no one was imposed upon, refuse to confirm the sale because the purchaser declined to encumber himself by an association with his enemies? If it would, then it may be asked, Is there any limit to the arbitrary power of the court?

Although in a foreclosure suit a court of equity furnishes equitable remedies, they are not arbitrary, but are adapted to the legal rights which, alone, lie at the basis, and furnish the guide, for the whole proceeding.

X.—The appellants seem to be of opinion that the court is under obligation to find for them some equivalent, or compensation, or indemnity, for having deprived them of an illegal advantage which they have been enjoying at the expense of the appellees for some eight months past.

Their present motion seems to be founded on that theory or notion.

It is respectfully submitted that in this respect they are wrong.

The fact that they are wrong, taken in connection with the consideration that all the relief asked on the present motion could have been had, if the appellants were entitled to it, on the motion already considered and determined by the court, constitutes, it is believed, a sufficient answer to the motion. If not, then a further answer is furnished by the following propositions:

XI.—The compensation, indemnity, or equivalent which the appellants ask, for having been justly deprived of an illegal advantage which they have been enjoying at the expense of the appellees, appears to be this:

1. The appellees ought to make a money deposit somewhere.

2. The amount of the money deposit should be either $229,000 or $600,000.

3. Provision should be made "out of the fund for the expenses of trust."

4. The appellees should give a release of the supersedeas bonds.

5. This court should force the appellees, in case they become purchasers, into a partnership with the appellants—should coerce matrimony upon parties who do not disguise their dislike of each other.

6. Upon the theory that the court ought to compensate them for having justly deprived them of an illegal advantage which they have been enjoying for eight months at the expense of the appellees, they propose to turn the court into brokers to negotiate a bargin between them and the appellees, one of the terms of which is to be that they will withdraw their appeal if the appellees, in case they become purchasers of the property, will divide the purchase with the appellants.

7. They propose that this court shall guaranty, or compel the appellees to guaranty, a certain dividend to the appellants out of the proceeds of sale.

8. They desire to save the privilege of filing bills of review, if they have it, or to acquire it, if they have it not.

9. Throughout the appellant's brief the fact is unblushingly avowed that they took the appeal, not so much for the purpose of resolving a question of legal right, as of obtaining a stay upon the appellees in the enjoyment of acknowledged rights. Having lost the grip they supposed they had acquired upon the appellees, they desire this court to furnish them, in any form or some form, some substitute for the now relaxed annoyance to which they have tried to subject the appellees, to be founded on a new calculation of compensations, offsets, and counterclaims, resulting in the striking of some or any balance in their favor.

XII.—The pretences upon which these moderate propositions are founded, are repeated in the appellants' various briefs importunately and with attempted pathos, but not always ingenuously, nor with strict remembrance of the facts shown by the record.

1. It has been stated on the part of the appellants that Pierson proved no bonds, that Dupuy proved only six, and that Hays proved only seventy-five. Here the attempt is made to confuse the case by not discriminating between what the appellees Hays Pierson and Dupuy proved, each in his own right severally, and what they proved jointly. They proved jointly many millions of dollars of bonds, as the master's report shows.

2. It is pretended that the surviving appellants represent somebody, or have a constituency besides themselves. Of this there is no proof, and can be no presumption. They do not represent Charles Moran, for he proved his own bonds in his own name. He represented himself and has not appealed.

3. It is pretended that the transfers of bonds to Hays, Pierson and Dupuy are revocable. This is repeated as often and as confidently as if it were true; but it is the opposite of the truth. The form of the transfers is incorporated in the record, and it shows that the transfers are irrevocable.

4. It is pretended that Mr. Henry Amy, who is one of the sureties on the appeal bond, and who transferred $227,000 in bonds to Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, about September 1, 1877, reserved the right of revocation.

There is not the slightest foundation in truth for this pretence. The whole correspondence with Mr. Amy has been produced before this court, and it disposes of this pretence.

5. It is pretended that the court below expressed the opinion that the mortgaged property would sell for nothing under the decree as it stands. This pretence is at odds with the truth of history.

6. It is pretended that the appellants have used every effort to terminate the supersedeas, and it is said that they repeatedly offered, last summer, to submit the cause on printed briefs at the opening day of this term. The making of any such offer, even once, is denied. The reasonableness of any such offer, if made, is denied. The record did not reach this court until October 12. It was then largely (and on the part of the appellants purposely) incomplete. It is very voluminous, and will be still more so when completed. No counsel who has a fair share of other business, and who wishes to do justice to his clients on this appeal, would be content with less than three months to prepare a brief upon it.

7. It is pretended as a grievance that the property is in the hands of "some of these same appellees." These "same appellees" have it in their hands against their own will, and desire to be rid of it.

8. It is pretended that the appellants did not ask a sale of the property in the court below. This pretence is contradicted by the record. Ketchum prayed a sale. So did Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs.

The consolidation order, which was consented to by all parties, recited that the suits were brought "for the common purpose of securing a sale," and it was upon the faith of that recital that the consolidation order was consented to. Neither of the suits was brought to vest the title to real estate in fee in the bondholders as tenants in common. None of the trustees had power to bring suit for such a purpose. They were appointed to sell, and the court had no power to vary the terms of the trust. The suits were brought to enable each bondholder to enjoy in severalty in money, if he wished, his share of the proceeds of a sale, and the decree was framed in accordance with, and so as to effect, that purpose. The so-called "Assignment of Errors" contained in the appellants' brief is an afterthought and a make shift. The case is within the ruling upon estoppel applied in

3 Otto, 49, Terry vs. Abraham.

9. It is pretended that Mr. Justice Bradley expressed the opinion or uttered the sentiment that some oppression was in danger of being used towards the "minority." This pretence is, if the appellees rightly understood Mr. Justice Bradley, contradicted by the record. He examined the scheme under which Hays, Pierson and Dupuy are acting, and states that the court was unable to point out any want of fairness in it. He nowhere contradicted the idea that the proprietor of a large interest has as much right to consideration, has as strong a claim to protection, has as good a title to his proportion of the proceeds of sale, as a small one; and has even as well founded a demand for indemnity against expense, unless the small proprietor has obtained the privilege of suing in forma pauperis.

10. It is pretended that the decree below excluded the appellants from their share of the proceeds of sale. This pretence is contradicted by the decree itself. It orders a sale to be made "for cash." Inasmuch as the bondholders are to receive the cash, it authorizes the purchaser to make his payment in bonds at their actual value, ascertained by reference to the amount bid. So far as he cannot pay in bonds he must pay in money. This, in the nature of things, is what the court could not help doing, in whatever words its decree might be framed. It could no more protect the so-called "minority," beyond this, on a foreclosure sale, than it could on a partition sale, and the court would go beyond its duty if it made the endeavor to do so. But, in truth, there is no "minority" or "majority" in point of legal right. The owner of ten bonds has a legal right to the proceeds of ten bonds, but that is no greater than the right of the owner of one bond to the proceeds of one bond, nor is it any less. The fact that, in numerical weight and in purchasing power, one is less than ten, is a fact of nature, not of human law.

11. It is pretended that by submitting to the terms of sale, the appellants would have got $440,000 for "their million," while by some other process they would have got $560,000. What that other process is, is not apparent. How, by selling for something else than cash, $120,000 additional in cash would have been realized, requires superhuman vision to see.

12. It is pretended that the decree is framed so as to make it to somebody's interest to buy the road for the least he can. Can any decree be so framed as to make it anybody's interest to buy at the highest price possible? Would the property bring more, if creditors were excluded from competition? The decree operates, in fact, to make it the interest of any large body of bondholders to bid as high as any one.

13. It is pretended that at first the decree provided for admitting all creditors into partnership with the purchaser down to the time of sale. This pretence is contradicted by the record. No such decree was made. What the court said—as quoted in the appellants' brief—was not mandatory, but kindly and conciliatorily advisory as follows:

> "Looking at the difficulties which beset the subject on every side, we think that if we allow the non-subscribing bondholders to participate in the purchase of the property, should it be made in behalf of the mortgage combination, on an equal footing with those who have joined it, that we shall have done all that we can do under the circumstances to protect their interests. The parties representing the reconstruction scheme, through their counsel, have offered to allow them to come in, and to extend the time for doing so until the first of August. We suggest that this time should be extended to the day of sale of the property. We perceive that the trustees have the power to do this—and keep the agreement on foot by extending the time sixty days at a time. We have, therefore, proposed an additional proviso to the decree to carry out this view. We hope that it will be acceded to by the counsel for the complainants and those representing the reconstruction schemes. We do not wish to dictate these terms to the parties who propose to purchase, but suggest that, in our judgment, the interest of all parties would be subserved by an arrangement of this sort. [The counsel for the complainants having suggested that it was very desirable, if the plan of reconstruction should be generally adopted, to avoid any sale at all, and proposing to extend the time for other bondholders to come to an arrangement, to the 1st of September, the court adopted that modification, and announced that the decree would be made accordingly unless very forcible objections to it should be presented at to-morrow's session of the court.]"

XIII.—These pretences being disposed of, the propositions of the appellants, so persistently forced upon the court, notwithstanding their repeated discussion and rejection, come to be considered.

1. The appellees do not ask the appellants to withdraw their appeal. The appellees are willing that it should be argued on its merits, in due season and with proper preparation—which is due to the case and to the court—and upon a proper transcript of the record. They therefore have no offer to make as an inducement to a withdrawal of the appeal. And they earnestly protest against being deprived of any legal right to which they are entitled, in order to compensate the appellants for parting with what the appellees have no use for. They carry their objection further. They earnestly protest against the conversion of this high tribunal into a brokerage board to negotiate bargains between parties who do not agree as to their legal rights. The proposition of the other side is, in substance, to dismiss their appeal when the decree is reversed.

2. Why should the appellees pay or deposit any money to or for the appellants, as a condition of being allowed to prosecute a decree which they have a legal right to prosecute ?

These suits were brought for the purpose of raising money to be distributed among those creditors who chose to take it.

The appellees do not owe the appellants anything. The decree does not establish the relation of debtor and creditor between them.

The original order of the court was that the purchaser should pay money, which the masters were to deposit in court for the security of the appellants. This was just ; but the appellants showed a want of confidence in the registry of the Circuit Court. This court respected their scruples, and substituted a non-negotiable bond, payable to the United States. But the suspicions of the appellants now attach to the United States.

If money is deposited by the appellees, what is to be done with it ? Is the purchaser to get the property for so much less, or is he to pay the full amount of his bid, and is the deposit then to be repaid to the appellees ? That would be a needlessly circuitous transaction, and, on the theory of the appellants as to the insecurity of the deposit, a very dangerous one besides.

If the appellants had proposed that the masters should ascertain the difference between the share of the proceeds coming to the appellants under the decree as it stands, and the share which would come to them upon a reversal as to the coupons of 1874, and should exact from the purchaser a bond for the payment of the difference, and that the bond should constitute a paramount lien on the mortgaged property, they would, for once, have proposed something reasonable.

3. If the appellees, instead of the purchasers, are to deposit money, why should the amount of the deposit be fixed at $600,000, or $229,000, or $75,000, or at any sum in excess of $4,000? The appellants do not represent any one but themselves,—if it be even true that they do that. They appealed in their own names, not as representatives.

It is not the duty of the court, nor of the appellees, to guarantee any certain result from a foreclosure sale. If the property brings the amount of the debt the appellants will be paid in full. If it brings less, they will get less, because entitled to less. In that event, the exaction of a larger deposit would be equivalent to the imposition of a penalty upon the enjoyment of an undisputed legal right. The appellees should not be called upon to assume a debt for which the land alone is liable, until they shall have received something belonging to the appellants.

If a deposit is made to the amount of $600,000 or $229,000, what is to become of it? Is it to be allowed to the purchaser against his bid, or is he to pay his bid without regard to the deposit?

It is not to be presumed that the property will bring less under the decree as it stands than it would if the coupons of 1874 were disallowed. The presumption is the other way: because the fund available in the purchase is larger.

4. Why should the appellees, as a condition of enjoying an acknowledged legal right, be required to deliver a release of the supersedeas bond? The reason assigned is, that the counsel who advised the appellants to give it, misled his clients. That reason would lead rather to the conclusion that the counsel ought to assume the liability, than that the appellees should lose the security.

The appellants have had the benefit of the bond for eight months. If a liability under it has accrued, the sureties should not shirk. If not, a release is unnecessary. It is not the province of this court to decide, in the first instance, how that is.

5. Why should it be imposed as a condition of allowing the appellees to purchase the property, that they should go into partnership with the appellants? Why should it not be imposed upon any other purchaser as well? Why should it not be imposed upon the appellants in favor of the appellees? Why should it not be imposed or dispensed with according to the extent of the purchaser's capital? Why should it not be applied if the property sells for $5,000,000, and not if it sells for $2,000,000? What rule of law or equity justifies its being imposed at all? Why should not the appellants be commanded to share in the purchase at the option of the appellees?

The appellees do not wish to buy the property, if it is to be incumbered by an enforced association with the appellants.

The creditors are entitled to a free sale of the property, unincumbreed by conditions which discourage competition and reduce the price.

The agreement under which Hays, Pierson and Dupuy are acting, creates a private trust not brought before this court for its cognisance. If its terms are altered by this court against the will of all parties, it is void, and the whole arrangement is at an end. The court can not turn Hays, Pierson and Dupuy into trustees against the conditions of the instrument, without risk of injury.

It is claimed by the appellents that they have an equity to be admitted, because their election to stay out was dictated by an over estimate of the duration of a stay, founded on bad advice. The same bad advisers are, however, the sponsorsfor the supposed equity. But the appellants made their choice deliberately. The advice they had was not so bad but that they knew there was at least a chance of the decree being affirmed, and knew, also, that an affirmance would put an end to the stay, leaving them unprovided for but at the option of the appellees.

Does it make any difference that the stay expired at the end of eight months, instead of lasting three years? No event has happened but one which they were bound to anticipate, although it has happened earlier than their astute calculations foretold, and less to their profit than they may have suggested to their advisers.

Equities are not to be guessed at. They depend upon circumstances; and here the appellee's counsel may, with propriety, repeat what was said on a former occassion, as follows:

"It was suggested heretofore by the appel"lants that they were aggrieved by the fact that "the Court below fixed a period within which "they must elect to abandon the litigation and "share in the purchase if Hays, Pierson and
"Dupuy should make it, or to pursue the litiga"tion and abandon the share in the purchase.

" It was thought that the Court should make " some effort to equalize the advantages and " disadvantages growing out of an unequal distribution of property, and compel the large " proprietor (whose own industry, business skill " and good fortune had made him so) to divide " his rights with the small proprietor. To that " end it was thought of by the Court that it " should decree a strict foreclosure in favor of " all the creditors ; or should direct the trustees " to purchase for the benefit of all, in proportion to their respective interests. But it was " foreseen that this machinery would not be " adequate to the purpose of lowering the small " bondholder to the pecuniary level of the large " one, because the same preponderating influence " would, as inexorably as the laws of gravity, " and beyond the potency of any Court to counteract it, legitimately make itself felt in the administration and partition of the property, and " in the execution of the trust.

" Whether natural equity requires (as artificial "law does not) that the successful party shall share " his advantages with the defeated one is a question whose solution depends upon facts—and " here some facts are wanting. If the coupon " holder paid dollar for dollar for his coupons " in order to prevent the mortgaged property " from being sacrificed in time of depression, " while the small bondholder paid only forty " cents on the dollar for his securities, and if " the latter for years maintained a war with the " former, rejecting all overtures of peace, and insisting that the coupon holder should have " nothing but his legal rights—there are minds " which might be insensible to the equity of " giving to the coupon holder any less than those " rights when he has established them at an expense of scores of thousands of dollars ; and " there are those to whom it would not be clear "that equity awards to the bondholder who has raised "so loud, and maintained so long, a clamor, any more "than the law allows him, when it is found out what "that is."

If an association with the appellants is to be forced on the appellees, it should be upon condition that the appellants pay all the expenses of the litigation down to this stage of it, and of the reorganization scheme as well.

The privilege of participating in the purchase was offered the appellants as an inducement to abstain from litigation. They would not and did not abstain. They have withheld from the appellees the equivalent which the latter were to have for the rejected privilege, and yet they ask the privilege all the same.

To coerce the appellees into a partnership with the appellants would be to defeat the object of the suits, which was, to enable each creditor to sever his own share of the property from the shares of others, if he chooses.

This is neither the time nor the place to anticipate and correct possible wrong in the sale. That will be under the control of the court below.

6. Why should this Court "make provision for the expense of trust?"

The Court below reserved that and all similar questions.

Ketchum is not a trustee.

2 Woods, 532, Ketchum vs. M. & O. R. R. Co.

If he is a trustee, he has committed a breach of trust by making war on his beneficiaries, the coupon holders. Moran, as appears by Moran's deposition, has indemnified him.

7. Why should the Court make any compensation to the appellants at the expense of the appellees for justly depriving the former of an illegal advantage, which they have been enjoying for eight months?

XIV.—It is submitted that the present application of the appellants should be denied except, perhaps, as suggested above, at paragraph 2 on page 32.

In pursuance of that view it is respectfully suggested that the court may with propriety pass an order substantially as follows:

"Ordered that the order made on this appeal on the eleventh day of February, 1878, be so far modified as that the bond thereby required on the part of Hays, Pierson & Du Puy shall not be required, but shall be dispensed with; but that the masters upon making the sale shall ascertain the difference between the amount coming to the appellants and those whom they lawfully represent in this appeal out of the proceeds of the sale under the decree as it now stands, and the amount which they would receive out of the proceeds of such sale in case the said coupons of 1874 had been disallowed; and that the masters accept from the purchaser in part payment for his bid his bond for the amount of such difference, and interest thereon, conditioned for the payment of such difference upon the determination of this appeal, the proceeds of such bond to be appropriated to the benefit of the holders of said coupons, or to the benefit of the appellants, and those whom they may legally represent on this appeal, as the case may require, and such bond to constitute a primary purchase money lien as against the purchaser, and his representatives and assigns, upon the real estate acquired by him as such purchaser at such sale."

P. S.—After the above was placed in type, the appellee's counsel was served, at the City of New York, February 20, with a copy of an affidavit of Mr. E. H. Grandin and a notice that the appellants had filed a petition for a re-hearing of the appellees' motion to vacate the supersedeas, and that if a re-hearing was granted, the oral argument would be had on February 22.

It appears from Mr. Grandin's affidavit that an Alabama Court of Chancery has restrained Mr. Morris Ketchum from acting as trustee, under the first mortgage of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company. How or why that fact should induce this court to give to the appellants indemnity or compensation for having justly deprived them of an unlawful advantage, which they have been enjoying for eight months, at the expense of the appellees, is not made clear. The fact, however, seems to point to the animus of the application now made to this court, to "make provision for the expenses of trust." That application appears to be an indirect attempt to get from this court a review or reversal of an interlocutory decree of a State Court, to the end that counsel for Mr. Ketchum may obtain compensation pending the proceedings for a sale, although the Circuit Court reserved the question of such compensation until after the sale. Mr. Grandin was engaged, it appears, in an attempt to precipitate the question of fees, contrary to the decree of the Circuit Court. In view of these facts, it is presumed that this court will not look upon the application to "make provision for expenses of trust," with any favor.

Regarding the application for a re-hearing, it is respectfully suggested that, after numerous and elaborate briefs in print, and oral discussions of exceptional length and duration, argument might well be considered as exhausted. The later arguments of the appellants are merely repetitions of what they said at first, and reply is only a repetition of former responses. A re-hearing should have been applied for in respect to the order of December 10 before the order of February 11 was made. Instead of asking for a re-hearing of the order of December 10, the appellants moved for and have obtained a modification of that order after elaborate oral arguments. This involved a waiver of all claim for a re-hearing of the order of December 10.

The appellees' counsel also received, on February 20th, at New York, a copy of the printed brief used by the appellants in this court on February 18th, and to which the above reply had been already prepared, with some MS. additions.

By one of these MS. additions the appellants ask, as compensation for having been justly deprived of an illegal advantage which they have been enjoying for eight months, that "the present order be modified, or the issuing of the mandate stayed, unless the appellees stipulate to admit appellants and their cestuis que trust into bond purchase after the decision of appeal, and without regard to its result." This is the same proposition already so often argued. This court should not take away one legal right from the appellees as a condition of declaring them entitled to another.

By another MS. addition the appellants ask that their bond be reduced to amount of appeal bond. The objections to this proposition are embraced in what is above said. The bond, as it stands, is a contract of which the consideration, construction, and obligation will be determined whenever an attempt is made to enforce it.

The order of February 11 has already been entered of record in Mobile.

By another MS. addition the appellants ask that the time for redemption be extended to Oct. 1st. The appellants are not the owners of any equity of redemption. That interest belongs only to the junior incumbrancers' and to the mortgagor. What have the appellants to do with protecting or enlarging it? Why should the court, as a compensation or indemnity to the appellants for justly depriving them of an illegal advantage which they have been enjoying for eight months, give them a privilege which they have no interest in using and no right to use?

There are no other MS. additions; and the appellee's counsel, therefore, humbly hopes that there is, and will be, nothing more for him to reply to.

Francis N. Bangs,
For Appellees.

Nov 26 1877
Submitted

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

Amended Petition and Notice, on Motion to Dismiss Appeal and Vacate Supersedeas.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL,
Of Counsel for Petitioners W. B. DUNCAN et al.

F. N. BANGS,
Of Counsel for Petitioners HAYS et al.

NEW YORK:
EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 BROADWAY, CORNER FULTON STREET.
1877.

Post

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States. 1

OCTOBER TERM.—1877.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs. No. 879.
WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

To the Honorable the Supreme Court of the United States:

The petition of William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, in their own right as individuals, and 2 as trustees under the mortgage hereinafter mentioned, and of William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. Haskins Dupuy and Alexander Duncan, respectfully shows as follows:

In or about the year 1853, the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, a body politic and corporate, duly created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Alabama, and operating also under and by virtue of the laws of the respective States of Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky, executed a mortgage upon its property and estate to Morris Ketchum, William R. 3
Hallett and John J. Palmer, to secure the payment of an indebtedness incurred by the said company, evidenced by bonds issued by said company for the principal sum of six million dollars, and interest thereon, which bonds bore interest, payable semi-annually, evidenced by coupons attached to said bonds respectively.

Prior to the year 1870, default was made by the said company in the payment of some of the interest coupons attached to said bonds, and thereupon said coupons were funded, and new bonds were issued there-

4 for, secured by the said first mortgage, such new bonds being known partly as sterling-interest bonds and partly as dollar-interest bonds. In the year 1875, William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, claiming to have become trustees under said mortgage in the place and stead of the original trustees named therein, commenced an action in the Circuit Court of the United States for the southern district of Alabama, to enforce the payment of the indebtedness secured by said mortgage, by a sale of the mortgaged property, and they were by said court appointed to be receivers of said property pending said suit, and they took possession of the property purporting to be covered by 5 said mortgage. The said William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, by direction of the parties interested therein, claimed in their bill of complaint in their said suit that said company had made default in the payment of all the interest which accrued upon said bonds within the year 1874. In said suit such proceedings were had that afterwards, and on or about the sixth day of March, 1876, an order was made by said court in the words and figures following:

IN THE

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA,

6 FIFTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF THE UNITED STATES.

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN, A. FOSTER ELLIOT vs. MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, Wm. D. Dunn, George H. Young and others.	No. 90.

AT CHAMBERS, 6th March, 1876.

This cause has been submitted to the court on the bill, answers, exhibits, replication, and the orders and proceedings in the suit, and a motion has been made 7

by the plaintiffs for the appointment of a master and a reference to him of the pleadings and proofs, to make the necessary inquiries and report, to prepare the cause for a hearing.

And after an examination of the matters submitted, and a consideration of the motion, the court orders: That James Gillette be appointed special master for this cause, and is directed to examine the mortgage or deed of trust attached to the bill as an exhibit, and to ascertain and report the railroads, branch railroads, estates, rights, property, movable and immovable, included in the terms and conditions of the same, and which have come to the possession and control of the trustees, and are subject to the decree of the court in this suit.

2. The court orders that the said master report the 8
mortgages, deeds of trust, agreements, judgments or other instruments which create a charge, lien or incumbrance on the said mortgaged property, with the order and priority of each of them, in imposing a charge upon the said property, and entitled to payment from the same.

3. The court orders the said master to report the bonds which are secured by the respective mortgages or deeds of trust, or incumbrances, and the amount thereof, and of the interest due thereon, and which form a (present or future) valid claim upon the said corporation; and if the debt exist in any other form than of bonds, then that he report the debt which may be due, or may become due, on the said several securities of the said corporation. Also the master will report the names of the holders of the securities 9
of the company which may be presented and proved to him, and the sum due to each holder.

4. In taking proofs of the debt the master may receive the original bonds, coupons or agreements of the corporation as evidence.

He may allow to be filed with him sworn copies of the bonds, coupons or other forms of debt charging the property, to be taken before any commissioner of the courts of the United States, or other officer authorized by the laws of the United States to administer oaths and to certify depositions, with affidavit of their ownership and authenticity. It shall be lawful for the master to designate, in the cities of New York, London, Amsterdam, or elsewhere if needed or be found

10 expedient, commissioners of the Circuit Courts of the United States, or consuls or vice-consuls of the United States, to advertise for the proofs of bonds and coupons, and to take proofs of the debts according to the forms of the proofs taken of claims in bankruptcy, and to prescribe a mode for the identification of the bonds so presented and proved to the said officers. And the said master may appoint persons in other cities to take such proof, if in his judgment it may be necessary or expedient. He may also examine the books of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company and its officers, so as to ascertain with exactness the debt due by the corporation which is secured by mortgage or which create liens on the property of the corporation embraced in the mortgage of the plaintiffs.

5. The court orders that if the trustees in the deed
11 of trust of said corporation, dated the 1st day of July, 1871, to wit: William Butler Duncan, Adrian Iselin and Richard T. Wilson should elect to do so, to allow them to file, within sixty days after the date of the filing of this order, a petition to become plaintiffs in this bill, and to set up therein their claims as trustees upon the said mortgaged property, or any portion of the same, upon their consent to abide the order and the decree of this court; and in the event of their election to do so, the master will take proofs of the deed of trust, and shall proceed in reference to the same in the same manner as he is ordered to do in respect to the first mortgage attached to the bill and to the claims under other deeds of trust, mortgage, or other incumbrances before mentioned.

6. The master may advertise in a paper published
12 in Mobile and New York, that he is ready to receive the proofs of the debts secured by the mortgages of the company, and shall give notice in the said advertisement, of the mode of making proofs, and before whom they can be made, and he shall authorize advertisements to be made in London and Amsterdam of a similar description by the officers to be designated for the purpose by him.

And the trustees of the several mortgages which have been produced to the court, and the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company are required to aid and to assist the master in collecting the proofs needed to making the report of the amount of the debt due on their respective mortgages and deeds of trust, so that 13

he may be able to perform his duty with promptitude
and with accuracy in settling a report for the court.

7. The office of the master must be open for the receiving of proofs, in the City of Mobile, three days of every week, and he may receive proofs every judicial day of the week, until the 15th day of October next, on which day the time for taking proofs shall be closed, unless the time be prolonged by a special order from one of the judges of the court.

8. The master may, during this period, make separate reports to the court of the matters submitted and hereinafter described, which may be filed in the office of the clerk of the court for examination and for exceptions.

But no report in reference to the debts so filed shall be confirmed until after the 15th day of October next 14
and unless it shall have been filed thirty days in the clerk's office.

9. Exceptions to the reports may be filed by the parties to the bills, but should any creditor who shall prove his claim be desirous to contest any other claim proved, and the trustees representing the claim of such creditor shall neglect or refuse to make the exception proposed by the creditor, upon proof that he has made the request of the trustee, and the neglect or refusal by him, the master shall allow of the exception or contestation, and shall report on it as if made by the trustee.

10. The master shall make up his entire report or reports, under this order, on or before the first Monday of December next, and shall file the same on or 15 before that day, and the usual time for examination and exception shall be given after the date of the filing of the report. He may, before making his report, call the parties before him, to consider the draft of the report and hear argument of counsel thereon, and the proofs shall be open to inspection.

His report shall embrace the best mode of disposing of the property, in case a sale shall be deemed necessary or proper, and his opinion of the present and prospective value, and he may report the price at which a foreclosure, without sale, may be best accomplished in the interest of all parties.

16 11. The master is at liberty to consider of a plan for the reorganization of the corporation, should the creditors of the same agree thereto. Any plan for that purpose presented by three-fourths of the creditors owing the different classes of debt, and supported by a corresponding portion of the holders of stock, he may report, with his opinion thereon. He shall take care to ascertain whether the plan proposed be assented to by the parties interested, to the extent aforesaid, before he accepts it for any purpose.

12. The master will make a separate report of the allowances to be made to the trustees for their services and as compensation, and the allowances for the charges, expenses, costs, and other forms of claim which are set forth in the deed of trust, or which have arisen in the course of the cause.

17 March 6, 1876.

W. B. Woods,
Judge.

Under the said order, owners of the bonds and coupons originally put in circulation upon the security of said mortgage, to the aggregate amount of four million nine hundred and ninety-two thousand four hundred and fifty-seven dollars ($4,992,457) in gold, and of sterling interest bonds and coupons to the aggregate amount of $820,858, gold, and of funded dollar interest bonds and coupons to the aggregate amount of $1,284,800 in currency of the United States, proved their claims before the special master appointed by the said order. 18

Among others, your petitioner, Alexander Duncan, produced and proved before said master, under said order, detached coupons which had matured in 1874, and were secured by said mortgage, to the principal amount of about $535,000; and one Louis Belloni, Jr., who had proved bonds to the amount of $6,000 under said order, requested said Duncan & Elliot to object to the allowance of said coupons as a part of the mortgage indebtedness, and said Duncan & Elliot did so object; and then, in support of said coupons, and in opposition thereto, a lengthy and tedious litigation 19 ensued between said Alexander Duncan as the proponent of said coupons for allowance under said order, and said Belloni as such objector. During such litigation, said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy became owners of said coupons, by assignment from said Alexander Duncan, and filed with said master their claim thereon, and continued the litigation with the said Belloni. The said master, by his report, sustained the claim upon said coupons, as a part of the indebtedness, but not as entitled to priority; and said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy in the name of said Alexander Duncan ~~and your petitioners~~ excepted to said report, and said Belloni also excepted to said report.

20 In the year 1871, the said railroad company had executed a trust deed upon so much of its property as was situate in the State of Tennessee, in order to declare, acknowledge, continue and protect, in favor of an issue of bonds made by the said company, a lien upon the property of the said company situate within the State of Tennessee, prior and paramount to the lien of said mortgage of 1853, the bonds so issued amounting in the aggregate, with the unpaid coupons thereon, to the sum of two million fifty-three thousand three hundred and eight dollars ($2,053,308), and said bonds last mentioned became current and are known, as the Tennessee substitution bonds.

Your petitioners, Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, before the month of June, 1877, had become the owners of 21 several millions of dollars of the evidences of debt issued by said company on the security of said mortgage of 1853, which claims said Hays, Pierson and Dupuy proved before said master, under said order of March 6, 1876, and which have never been disputed or objected to; and said Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy now are the owners of bonds originally issued under said mortgage of 1853, and of coupons originally attached to such bonds, to the aggregate amount of $5,993,635.65, and of funded sterling interest bonds and 22 coupons issued upon the security of said mortgage of 1853 to the aggregate amount of $918,913.92, and of funded dollar interest bonds and coupons issued upon the security of said mortgage of 1853 to the aggregate amount of $1,712,803.80, and of said Tennessee substitution bonds and of coupons originally attached thereto, to the aggregate amount of $1,954,828; and said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy have also become and now are the owners of interest coupons, in addition to those above referred to, detached from bonds of which they have not become the owners, to the aggregate amount of $80,540, the aggregate amount of paramount and subordinate liens on said mortgaged property, now, on October 18, 1877, held by said Hays, 23 Pierson & Dupuy, being $12,453,823.11 out of total outstanding issues amounting to $14,120,849.62; and the following is a correct statement of the mortgage liens of the said railroad company and of the proportion of the said liens of which said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy have become and now are the owners, holders and possessors.

(See statement on next page.)

STATEMENT OF THE MORTGAGE LIENS OF THE MOBILE & OHIO R. R. CO.

	OUTSTANDING ISSUE REPORTED BY MASTER.			BONDS, &C., PROVED BEFORE SPECIAL MASTER.			OWNED BY HAYS, PIERSON & DUPUY.
	Bonds.	Coupons thereof due and unpaid.	Total of bonds and coupons.	Bonds.	Coupons.	Total of bonds and coupons.	Bonds.	Coupons.	Total of bonds and coupons.
First Mortgage Bonds. £.	$5,609,000 00	$1,289,941 80	$6,898,941 80	£918,225 00	£187,292 55	$4,902,457 23 Gold.	$4,883,000 00	$1,110,635 65	$5,993,635 65	88%
£. Interest bonds.....	769,920 00	152,444 16	922,364 16	£141,900 00	26,652 00	$820,858 00 Gold.	767,040 00	151,873 92	918,913 92	99%
$ Interest bonds.....	1,518,000 00	365,832 00	1,883,832 00	$1,004,100 00	280,700 00	$1,284,800 00 Currency.	1,380,400 00	332,403 80	1,712,803 80	92%
Detached coupons of 1874, from bonds not owned by Hayes, Pierson & Dupuy.								80,540 00	80,540 00
Total liens of 1853....	7,896,920 00	1,808,217 96	9,705,137 96				7,030,440 00	1,675,453 27	8,705,393 37	89%
Tennessee substitution bonds..........	1,668,000 00	385,308 00	2,053,808 00	120,000 00	91,805 00	211,805 00 Gold.	1,588,000 00	366,828 00	1,954,828 00	95%
Total of first liens....	9,564,920 00	2,193,525 96	11,758,445 96				8,618,440 00	2,042,281 37	10,660,721 37	91%
Other mortgage liens outstanding........	1,927,707 05	434,696 01	2,362,403 06	1,257,154 68	285,539 88	1,542,694 56	1,532,264 74	260,837 00	1,793,101 24	75%
Totals...............	$11,492,627 05	$2,628,221 92	$14,120,849 02	$7,152,811 03	$1,699,204 57	$8,852,015 60	$10,150,704 74	$2,303,118 37	$12,~~446~~ 453,823 11	88%

27 After the commencement and during the pendency of the said suit of the said Duncan & Elliot, and after the making of said order of March 6, 1876, and on or about the 14th day of March, 1876, the said Morris Ketchum, claiming to be still a trustee and the sole surviving trustee, under the said mortgage of 1853, also brought an action in the said Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, on the Equity side of said court, to which action he made the said railroad company, and also the said Duncan & Elliot, parties defendant; and in his said bill the said Morris Ketchum claimed that the company had not made default in the payment of the coupons
28 which matured as aforesaid within the year 1874, but that the said interest had been paid and the claim therefor extinguished, and that said Alexander Duncan was not entitled to collect the same; but the said Morris Ketchum also alleged and claimed that the said company had, in the year 1875, made default in the payment of the interest which then accrued under the said mortgage of 1853; and the said Morris Ketchum brought his suit for the apparent or, at least, the avowed, purpose of enforcing, by the sale of the mortgaged property, the payment of the indebtedness which he admitted had accrued and remained unpaid under the said mortgage, as well as for the purpose of excluding said coupons of 1874 from all share in the pro-
29 ceeds of said sale, and also for the purpose of preventing said William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot from exercising any power, authority, or right under said mortgage of 1853; but said Ketchum did not make said Alexander Duncan, or said Hays, Pierson, or Dupuy a party to his said bill.

Afterwards, and on or about the fifth day of February, 1877, Charles Moran, as attorney in fact for, and in the names of, D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard de Watteville, Henry Jump, and Masson Chavannes, as plaintiffs and as holders of bonds issued and outstanding upon the security of the said mortgage of 1853, claiming also that the said railroad company had not 30

defaulted in the payment of the interest which matured as aforesaid within the year 1874, and that the coupons for such interest had been paid, and claiming that there was doubt upon the question who was the trustee, or who were the trustees, entitled to act in enforcing said mortgage of 1853, brought a representative suit on the behalf of said Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs and others similarly situated, on the Equity side of the said Circuit Court, against the said railroad company, the mortgagor, and against the said Duncan & Elliot, and against the said Morris Ketchum, asking for a decree to enforce, by a sale of the mortgaged property, the pay- 31
ment of the indebtedness which they admitted had accrued under the said mortgage, excluding said coupons of 1874, but did not make said Alexander Duncan, nor said Hays, Pierson, or Dupuy a party to said bill: but your petitioners say that, before the filing of the said bill of the said Ziegler and his co-complainants, the said Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs had, in the name of Charles Moran, or Moran Brothers, put in proof before the master appointed by the said order of March 6, 1876, in the suit in which said Duncan & Elliot were plaintiffs, whatever bonds were held by them, the said Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs, and so had become parties to said first suit;
and Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Car- 32
rard and Cephise Chuffard, had also, in the names of said Charles Moran, or of Moran Brothers, and by virtue of said order of March 6, 1876, proved certain first mortgage bonds and coupons held by them, before said master; but neither of the said Ziegler, Jump, Chavannes, De Watteville, Renevier, Merian, Carrard, Chuffard, Moran, or Moran Brothers, had made any objection under said order of March 6, 1876, to the claim offered for proofs by the said Alexander Duncan, or by said Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy; and said Alexander Duncan had also, under said order of reference, 33 put in proof bonds secured by said mortgage of 1853 for the principal sum of $75,000, to which no objection was made by any party.

Your petitioners further show that the said suit in which Duncan & Elliot were complainants, was ready for final hearing at a stated term of the said Circuit Court, appointed to be held at the City of Mobile on the first Monday of June, 1877; but neither of said other suits was then ready for hearing, because issues of fact had not been joined, nor had any order of reference been made nor any proofs been taken, therein; and counsel for said railroad company, and for your petitioners, Duncan and Elliot, and for said Ziegler 34 and his co-complainants, and for said Morris Ketchum, respectively, and for your petitioners Hays, Pierson and Dupuy and Alexander Duncan jointly, appeared, and certain orders were made by the said court, of which the following are copies:

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

W. B. DUNCAN, A. F. ELLIOTT, AS TRUSTEES, &c.,

vs.

35 THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD Company, Rodolph Merian, et al.

And now come Rodolph Merien, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, and move in open court that they may be admitted as parties defendant to the bill herein, with leave to file an answer thereto with all the rights of parties to said bill.

After hearing counsel, and the court being duly advised,

It is ordered that the said Rodolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard, and Cephise Chuffard be, and they are hereby, admitted as parties defendant to this suit, and that they have leave to file an answer to the bill herein, and they have and exercise all the rights and privileges of parties to the record herein. 36

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
C. Justice.
W. B. WOODS,
Circuit Judge.

Filed June 5th, 1877.
N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

At a Stated Term of the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Southern District of Alabama, held at the Court House, in the City of Mobile, on the 5th day of June, 1877. 37

Present—Hon. JOS. P. BRADLEY,
Circuit Justice, &c.
" W. B. WOODS,
Circuit Judge.

WM. B. DUNCAN AND ANDREW F. ELLIOT
vs.
THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

The parties appearing in open court, by their respective solicitors and counsel, and consenting to this order, on motion of Mr. F. N. Bangs, solicitor and of counsel for Wm. H. Hays, Wm. S. Pierson, and T. Haskins Dupuy, claiming to be the assignees and owners of the claims of Alexander Duncan, exhibited before the master in this cause under an order made March 6th, 1876, it is ordered, 38

That said Wm. H. Hays, Wm. S. Pierson, and T. Haskins Duupy be, and they are hereby, admitted to prosecute the claims of the said Alexander Duncan in this court, and, if so advised, by appeal, review and otherwise as they may be advised, in the same manner. and with the like effect, and to the same end and intent, with which the said Alexander Duncan can prose-39 cute the same, or could have prosecuted the same if he had continued to be the holder of such claims.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
C. Justice.
W. B. WOODS.
Circuit Judge.

Filed June 5th, 1877.
N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

Your petitioners further show that at the same time orders were made by the court, by consent of the parties concerned, admitting your petitioners to be defendants in said Ketchum suit and in said Ziegler suit, of one of which orders the following is a copy:

40 At a Stated Term of the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Southern District of Alabama, held at the Court Room, in the City of Mobile, on the 5th day of June, A. D. 1877.

Present- Hon. JOS. P. BRADLEY, Circuit Justice, &c.
" W. B. WOODS, Circuit Judge, &c.

MORRIS KETCHUM
vs.
THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD AND OTHERS.

41 The parties appearing in court, by their respective solicitors and counsel, and consenting to this order, it is ordered,

That Wm. H. Hays, Wm. S. Pierson, and T. Haskins Dupuy be, and they are hereby, admitted to intervene for their own interest, as defendants, in this suit, in the same manner and with the like effect as if they had been named as defendants in the bill, and had been brought into court by a subpœna, with leave to file the answer herewith submitted to the court by them, and this day filed.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY, C. J.
W. B. WOODS, C. J.

Filed June 5th, 1877.
N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

And at the same time the following order was made in all of the said suits : 42

At a stated term of the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Douthern District of Alabama, held at the Court House in the City of Mobile, on the 5th day of June, 1877.

Present—Hon. Joseph P. Bradley, Circuit Justice, &c.
" W. B. Woods, Circuit Judge.

Wm. B. Duncan and Andrew F. Elliot, Trustees, &c.,

vs. 43

The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company et al.

Morris Ketchum

vs.

The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company et al.

D'Orelli Ziegler et al.

vs.

The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company et al. 44

The parties in these several causes appearing in open court by their respective solicitors and counsel, and consenting to this order.

And it appearing to the court that the above entitled suits are instituted for the common purpose of securing a sale of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad and other property of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, under the first mortgage thereof, and disputes having arisen as to the legal title of and in said first mortgage, which might embarrass the sale of the mortgaged premises, and it appearing to the court that 45 all parties claiming said legal title are before the court, and likewise the cestuis que trust of said first mortgage, and that a full and perfect title to said railroad and other mortgage property may be obtained under decrees in all of said suits combined.

It is, therefore, ordered that the above causes be consolidated, and proceed concurrently before this court to final decree.

And it is further ordered that all the proofs taken, orders made, and proceedings had, in the cause first above entitled, may be read upon the hearing of the causes so consolidated in the same manner and with the same effect as if taken, made and had in all of said causes, and that the evidence taken before the master in said first mentioned cause be read and used as evidence on the final hearing of said causes; and that 46 said causes be set down for final hearing on the pleadings, proofs, orders, and proceedings forthwith.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
Circuit Justice.
W. B. WOODS,
Circuit Judge.

June 5th, 1877.

The above order is made without prejudice to and saving the rights of Wm. B. Duncan, Richard T. Wilson, and Adrian Iselin, as trustees for the Tennessee substitution bondholders (so-called), who have not consented to this order; and the cause is to proceed to decree without them.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY
Circuit Justice.
W. B. WOODS,
47 Circuit Judge.

Filed—June 5th, 1877.

N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

Immediately upon the making of the said orders the said causes and consolidated cause were and was brought on to a final hearing, and your petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, were heard by counsel, and, in support of their exceptions to said Master's report, as well as in support of their answers in said Ketchum & Ziegler suits respectively, they claimed not only that the said coupons of 1874 still continued to constitute a part of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage of 1853, but also claimed that the said coupons were entitled to 48

priority of payment out of the proceeds of the sale of the said mortgaged premises; and the said Ketchum, in support of his bill, and the said Ziegler and his co-complainants, in support of their bill, and also said Cephise Chuffard, Rodolph Merian, Eugene Renevier and Charles Carrard, in support of their answers in the said suit of Duncan & Elliott, and said Belloni, in support of his exceptions to the master's report, contended that said coupons were not only not entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property, but had ceased to constitute part of the mortgage indebtedness, and were not entitled to be provided for, to any extent, out of the proceeds of the 49 sale of said property.

On the hearing of the said causes there was filed a stipulation as follows:

U. S. CIRCUIT COURT.

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN ET AL.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM

vs. 50

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER ET AL.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

"The undersigned, parties who have proved their 51 claims under the order made by the Circuit Court in the first above entitled cause on March 6th, 1876, namely:

"List of the holders of the securities of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company who have transferred, assigned to, and deposited with W. H. Hays, W. S. Pierson and T. Haskins Dupuy, the Committee of Reorganization under the agreement, &c., dated October 1, 1876, the several bonds and securities set opposite their names, respectively.

"N. B.—Bonds of £225, £205 and £200 are estimated as $1,000 each. The principal only is included in this statement; the bonds have attached to them the coupons past due from and including the coupons which matured May 1st, 1874, on the Sterling and Interest Arrearage Bonds, July 1st, 52 1877, on the Tennessee Substitution Bonds, March 1st, 1875, on the Second Mortgage and Convertible Bonds.

"In addition thereto, all past due and unpaid coupons on the total amount of the above issues detached therefrom, and which matured May and November, 1874, and July and January, 1875, have been transferred and assigned to, and deposited with the committee."

(There follows here, in the original stipulation, a list of bondholders who had proved their claims, and assigned such claims to Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, including Alexander Duncan as a holder of first mortgage sterling bonds to the principal amount of $75,000. The list includes the names of more than five hundred in- 53 dividuals, firms and corporations, who had become assignors to Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, the aggregate amount of first mortgage sterling bonds so proved and assigned, at the date of the stipulation, appearing by the stipulation to be $3,931,000; of sterling interest bonds $765,120; of arrearage interest bonds $1,192,800; of Tennessee substitution bonds $1,555,000; of second mortgage bonds $961,990; of convertible bonds $474,925; total $8,878,835; all these amounts being exclusive of interest. A full copy of the list is printed in the petition submitted to this court on October 15, at pages 18 to 34.)

"Do hereby place on file this waiver of their objection to the allowance of the coupons of 1874, as a part of the first mortgage debt, and their consent that such 51 coupons may be paid, with interest, out of the proceeds of sale, prior to any other claims secured by said mortgage; and we adopt and approve the acts and doings of Duncan and Elliot as trustees.

Dated Mobile, June 5th, 1877.

F. N. Bangs,
Solicitor and of Counsel for said parties.

Filed June 5th, 1877.

N. W. Trimble,
Clerk.

On the 15th day of June, 1877, there was entered a decree, in the words and figures following:

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES 55

For the Southern District of Alabama.

W. Butler Duncan and A. Foster Elliot
vs.
Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, et al.

Morris Ketchum
vs.
Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, et al.

D'Orelli Ziegler et al.
vs.
Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company and others. 56

These causes having been consolidated and set down for a hearing at the same time under the order of this court, to be disposed of by the same decree, came on to be heard, upon the pleadings, exhibits, orders, reports, exceptions, and the testimony taken in the cause as taken before the master, and were argued by counsel; and thereupon the court, upon consideration of the premises, declares, orders, and decrees—

1. That the reports submitted by the master, under the orders and directions to him, are confirmed, and all the exceptions to the same are overruled.

57 2. The court declares and decrees the deed of trust described in the bill, executed by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, dated the first of November, 1853, and appointing John J. Palmer, Wm. R. Hallett, and Morris Ketchim, the survivors and successors of them, as trustees, is a valid conveyance of the railroad of the said corporation, and of all the property therein mentioned, for the security of the uniform series of first mortgage bonds, and the interest to accrue thereon therein set forth, and that the said bonds and coupons, including the coupons which became due on the first of May and November, 1874, represented as owned by Alexander Duncan, are secured equally, and to be ratably paid from the proceeds of the property, without priority or preference among them.

3. The court declares and decrees there was a de-
58 fault on the part of the corporation aforesaid in the payment of the installments of interest promised to be paid in May, 1874, also in November, 1874, and successively in May and November since that date, and that a title accrued to the trustees under the said deed therefrom to enter into possession of the property, and to obtain a decree for the sale of the property therein described, to be enforced unless the said corporation shall pay the debt which has been ascertained to be due on the said deed of trust by the master's report in this cause.

4. The court orders and decrees that the defendants to this cause, to wit: The trustees in the second and the other deeds of mortgage of a date subsequent to that of the mortgage described in the bill as the first mortgage, pay into the registry of this court on or be-
59 fore the first day of August next, the amount of the debt ascertained to be due on the deed of trust by the master and reported to the court, and in case of any default on their part, that their equity of redemption shall be henceforth barred and foreclosed.

5. The court orders and decrees that the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company be authorized to pay into court the amount ascertained to be due upon the reports of the master on or before the first day of August next, together with all costs in the matter with all costs in the cause, and in case of a compliance with this order, that further proceedings on this decree shall be suspended.

6. In case of a failure to make the payment as provided in this decree at the time appointed therein, to wit, the first day of August next, the court orders 60

James Gillette, the master heretofore appointed in this cause, and Thomas H. Herndon, who is hereby appointed special master for the purpose, to advertise the property described in the said deed of trust of the date of the first day of November, A. D. 1853, as aforesaid, and all property, and franchises, and rights comprehended in its terms, for sale, at public auction, in bulk and as an entirety, for cash, to the highest bidder, on some day to be designated by them in the advertisement of sale. The sale will be made in front of the Court House, in the City of Mobile, between the hours of noon and three o'clock P. M. They will advertise the sale in a daily paper published in Mobile, and in two daily papers published in the City of New York, for eight weeks prior to the day of sale. They will appoint a crier before the sale whose fee shall not exceed 61 one hundred dollars. The masters will attend the sale in person, and take care that it be fairly and regularly conducted, and with proper regard to the rights of all persons. The master shall exact from any bidder, before making an adjudication to him, a deposit of the sum of fifty thousand dollars in money, to defray the costs, expenses, and charges incident to the trust, and a further deposit of one hundred thousand dollars in money, or of the bonds or coupons described in the said deed of trust and master's report as a part of the debt secured by the said deed, and in case of his refusal, the masters may reject the bid thus made, and proceed with the sale as if the bid had not been made. In case of any failure of a bidder to comply with the terms of sale, and the masters shall find that the bidder will not or cannot comply, they may make a re-sale on 62 the day of the sale at the same place, or they may give notice that on the day following, between the same hours of twelve noon and three P. M., they will make a sale also at the same place under the decrees according to its conditions; and they shall have power to adjourn the sale for thirty days, to be made at the same place, by adding a note to the advertisements for that purpose, should they deem that course advisable, and by causing publication of said advertisements to be continued in the same papers until the day of sale.

7. The court orders and decrees that the masters may receive in payment from the highest and last bidder, bonds and coupons which form a part of the first mortgage debt ascertained to be due or owing by

63 the master in his report, and sustained by the opinion of this court; provided, however, that a sum sufficient to pay the costs, charges, and expenses of the trust as above mentioned, whether exceeding the said cash deposit or not, and also to provide for the payment of the pro rata dividend which shall be due or owing to the owners of other bonds and coupons, secured under the deed of trust, must be paid in money, and provided also that if the said mortgage property shall be bid off directly or indirectly by, for, or in behalf of the bondholders and creditors who have, or shall have, entered into and subscribed the agreement for the re-adjustment of the securities of said company, dated October 1, 1876, commonly called the agreement of re-organization, then and in that case all and every bondholder and creditor of said company not having already
64 entered into and subscribed said agreement, who shall, on or before the first day of September next, enter into and subscribe the same and deposit their securities with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in the City of New York, or with the Bank of Mobile in the City of Mobile, as provided by said agreement, shall be, and they are hereby allowed, to participate in said bid and purchase on the same terms and on an equal footing in all respects, according to the character of their claims respectively, with the said bondholders and creditors who have heretofore entered into and signed said agreement.

8. The court orders and decrees that the masters shall make their report of the sale and proceedings connected with the same, and of the performance of the contract by the purchaser, and shall report a draft of a deed of 65 sale under this decree, to be executed by themselves, and shall file the same with the report and their signature thereto, all of which shall be subject to the final order of confirmation. The masters, in addition to the deed to be executed by them, shall prepare a deed of confirmation of the sale and of the conveyance executed by them, and a release of all claim on the property as trustees, or otherwise, with certificates of acknowledgment, fitting it for registration in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky, which deed of confirmation and release shall be executed and acknowledged by William B. Duncan, A. Foster Elliot and Morris Ketchum, as well as by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, within thirty days from the day of sale, and be reported to the court for confirmation. 66

9. The court orders and decrees, that it appearing to the court that there is a clause in the deed of trust or mortgage described in the bill, saving and reserving the rights and liens that may attach to the roadway and construction thereon, in favor of the State of Tennessee, which will exist and attach as a prior lien by statute of that State, in the event of said State aiding in the construction of the railroad of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company of that State, being a distance of one hundred and eighteen (118) miles; and it appearing that there was such aid, and a claim for a prior lien under the statutes in Tennessee is the subject of controversy in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee and the parties asserting such prior liens are not before this 67 court, and this claim cannot be settled here: The court orders that the sale to be made under the orders of this decree be subject to the rights and liens which exist, if any, under the statutes of the State of Tennessee, in favor of the State of Tennessee, or its grantees or assigns, or the parties asserting such prior liens, in so far as the railroad and property affected by that lien are concerned.

10. The court further orders and decrees, that the sale of the Gainesville Branch Road shall be without prejudice to a prior mortgage existing on that branch railroad, as represented in the Report of the Master upon that subject, in the reference to him, in favor of William D. Dunn, John Reid, Jr., Robert C. Crawford, trustees.

11. The court orders and decrees, that all the equities among the parties to the suit, all questions of costs and for allowances, and all other questions not disposed of or specially reserved in the foregoing decree, but properly arising under the same, are continued and reserved until after the sale and report by the masters of their proceedings thereupon. 68

June 15th, 1877.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
Circuit Justice.
W. B. WOODS,
Circuit Judge.

Your petitioners, Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, referring to the proviso in the seventh paragraph of the said

69 decree prescribing that certain ~~par~~anticipated purchasers of said property should hold the same for the benefit of a class of persons therein specified, say that they, the said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, are the holders of the securities originally held by the subscribers to the agreement of October 1, 1876, referred to in said seventh paragraph, being the securities assigned to them as hereinbefore stated; that the said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy regarded that clause of the said decree as imposing restrictions on them in the use of their own property in favor of persons who had not only not made any corresponding concession, but who had done all they possibly could to deprive your peti-
70 tioners and those they represented of the enjoyment of their legal rights; but, nevertheless, with a view to ending the litigation, and in response to conciliatory suggestions from the Court, the said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy consented to the insertion of that clause in said decree, although the same in their judgment imposed restrictions and conditions, beyond what the law authorized, upon the use and enjoyment by them of their own property; and if any person is aggrieved by that clause of the said decree, the persons so aggrieved are not the said appellants, but are the said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, and those whom they represent.

Your petitioners further show that before the settle-71 ment and entry of the said decree, his Honor, the learned Associate Justice of this Court presiding, delivered the opinion of the Court upon the merits of the controversy, from which opinion your petitioners make the following extracts:

Extract No. 1.—" The consolidation of these cases by agreement of the parties relieved us from the necessity of deciding between the conflicting claims of the two sets of trustees. Both being before the Court, as well as the parties beneficially interested, we can make a decree by which a sale of the mortgaged premises will be valid, and confer a good title."

Extract No. 2.—"The only question of importance remaining in the causes as now consolidated is, whether the interest coupons which became due in May and November, 1874, on the first mortgage bonds, are valid and outstanding securities, entitled to payment out of the proceeds of the mortgaged premises pari passu with the bonds from which they were severed, or even prior to said bonds, or whether they are to be deemed to have been paid and satisfied. The holder of these coupons (they not having been canceled), contends that they were purchased from the original holders thereof, and were not paid, and that by virtue of such purchase he is entitled to the full benefit of the mortgage security, and even to priority of payment over the coupons subsequently maturing, and over the principal of the bonds; and if not entitled as purchaser that he is at least entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original holders, as if the coupons had never been paid." 72 73

Extract No. 3.—"The right of the contestants to appear and oppose the claim of the present holders of these coupons is questioned. It is said that having come before the Master and proved their own bonds without making objections to the coupons which were also presented and proved before the Master, they are now precluded from raising objections to them. The statement is not precisely accurate. One of the contestant bondholders, at least, did present objections before the Master (which objections were adopted and presented by the complainants as trustees of the mortgage,) and others have since been permitted to appear as defendants in the cause, and file an answer, which they have done, raising the very issue. In addition to this, the trustees of the second mortgage filed an answer disputing the validity of the coupons. We think, therefore, that the issue has been distinctly and properly raised." 74

But your petitioners say that the trustees of the second mortgage have not appealed from any part of the said decree.

On the day of the rendering of the said decree, the said D'Orelli Ziegler and his co-complainants, namely, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, Bernard de Watteville, and also the said Morris Ketchum, Rudolph 75 Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard, and Cephise Chuffard, by E. L. Andrews, Esq., their Solicitor and Counsel, applied in open court for the allowance of an appeal from the said decree, and supersedeas thereon; and on June 16, 1877, an entry was made in the minutes of the said court in the words and figures following, viz:

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

W. B. DUNCAN ET AL.
vs.
76 THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM
vs.
THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER ET AL.
vs.
THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD
77 COMPANY ET AL.

In the above cases consolidated, the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States heretofore prayed is hereby granted and allowed.

The supersedeas bond is hereby fixed at one hundred thousand dollars, with sureties resident in the City of New York, who may unite in said bond in any proportionate sums. The said bond shall stay execution, if approved and filed at any time within sixty days.

Filed June 16th, 1877.

N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

And the following is a copy of the opinion of the 78 court upon the said application for a supersedeas:

BRADLEY, J.—"An appeal being granted and allowed in these cases from the decree rendered therein on the 15th day of June, 1877, the question is raised as to the amount of the appeal bond to be given by the appellants, they being the plaintiffs in the second and third suits and defendants in the first.

"The decree appealed from sustained the claim of Alexander Duncan, as holder of certain first mortgage coupons to the amount of over $500,000, to come in pari passu with the first mortgage bondholders, and directs a foreclosure of the first mortgage and a sale of the mortgaged property to pay the bonds secured thereby, and also certain other bonds given for interest, amounting in the aggregate to about ten millions 79 of dollars. Purchasers are by the decree allowed to pay the purchase money in bonds and coupons to the extent of their proportionate interest as bondholders in the whole amount of first mortgage bonds. About four-fifths of the bondholders have agreed to and subscribed a scheme for reorganizing the company and purchasing the road.

"The court has allowed the remaining bondholders until the 1st of September to join the said scheme.

"A portion of the bondholders, holding less than one-tenth of the entire mortgage interest, are dissatisfied with the decree, and promote the appeal.

"The property being in the hands of a receiver, and not producing much, if any, more than the expenses and necessary repairs of the road, the bondholders to whom the property or its proceeds really belongs, will 80 be kept out of possession for two or three years by the intervention of the appeal.

"This delay in obtaining possession of the property or its proceeds we regard as calculated greatly to injure them.

"By having immediate possession they could make the necessary improvements and connections required by making the property much more remunerative, and could manage it much more to their advantage generally than a receiver can do.

"Or, if the property were immediately sold, they would be in possession of the interest of the purchase money, of which they will now be deprived for two or three years by the appeal.

81 "In our judgment, therefore, an appeal bond for one hundred thousand dollars is very moderate in amount.

"The appellants contend that on the principles of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Jerome vs. McCarter, 21 Wall. 17, and of , decided at the last term of said court, a bond for one hundred thousand dollars is greatly in excess of what should be required.

"They insist that in contemplation of law, possession by a receiver is equally beneficial to those who are interested in the property, as possession by the parties themselves.

"While this may be the case with regard to dead property, or even real estate generally, we think it is not so where the property, like a railroad, is perishable 82 in its character, and has to be managed, worked, repaired, and taken care of, in order to preserve it.

"We think that the owner is a better manager than a trustee or receiver, who is hampered and restrained in his management, and cannot take advantage of all those means and opportunities which the owner could do for rendering the property most profitable and productive.

"On these grounds, we think, that the damage sustained by the delay will be much more than the mere costs and expenses of the suit, and that the actual loss and injury to the owner, or in this case, the bondholders, may be taken into consideration by the court in fixing the amount of the bond; and that loss and damage, we think, will not be less than the amount we have required.

83 "The most forcible difficulty which presents itself to our minds is the measure of damages which would be applicable in a suit on the bond.

"Would it be admissible for the plaintiffs to show a loss to the bondholders by reason of advantages lost for the cause above referred to? Of this there may be a question. But our opinion is, on the whole, that such a damage would be the subject of a recovery.

"If damages are really sustained, there seems no good reason why they should not be recovered."

WOODS, Circuit Judge, concurring.

And afterwards, and on or about the fifteenth day of July, 1877, there was filed in the office of the Clerk of said court, at Mobile aforesaid, a bond, which, 84 with the endorsements thereon, is in the words and figures following:

Know all men by these presents, that we, Charles Moran, resident of the City and State of New York, and Henry Amy, Theodore F. Moran, and Isaac R. Cornell, residents of the same place, are severally and respectively held and firmly bound unto William B. Duncan, of the City and State of New York, and Andrew F. Elliot, of the City of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, in the respective sums following, to wit: the said Charles Moran, Henry Amy, Theodore F. Moran, and Isaac R. Cornell, in the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars each, to be paid to the said W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliot, their executors, administrators and successors; for which several payments, 85 well and truly to be made, each of them doth hereby bind himself, his heirs, executors and administrators, severally and respectively, by these presents.

Sealed with our seals and dated this third day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven.

Whereas, lately, at a regular term of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Southern District of Alabama, held at the City of Mobile, three certain suits brought therein for a common purpose, were, by order of said court, consolidated into a single cause:

And, whereas, in one of said suits William B. Duncan and Andrew F. Elliot, as trustees, are complainants, and Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, are defendants, on be- 86 half of first mortgage bondholders of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company; and in another of said suits Morris Ketchum is complainant as trustee, and W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliot, above named, are defendants; and in another of said suits D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard de Watteville, Masson Chavannes and Henry Jump are complainants, on behalf of first mortgage bondholders of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, and W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliot are defendants:

And, whereas, a decree was rendered in the said consolidated cause:

And, whereas an appeal from the said decree to the Supreme Court of the United States was prayed in open court on behalf of Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli

87 Ziegler, Bernard de Watteville, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, which appeal was granted, and the order granting the same was filed with the Clerk of said Circuit Court, and a citation directed to said W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliot, citing and admonishing them to be and appear at a Supreme Court of the United States to be holden at Washington the second day of October next:

Now, the conditions of the above obligations are such that if the said Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard de Watteville, Masson Chavennes, Henry Jump, Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard, and Cephise Chuffard shall prosecute the said appeal to effect and answer all damages and costs, if they fail to make the said appeal good, then the 88 above obligation to be void, else to remain in full force and virtue.

Chas. Moran. [seal.]
H. Amy. [seal.]
Isaac R. Cornell. [seal.]
Theo. F. Moran. [seal.]

Taken and acknowledged before me, as to Chas. Moran, H. Amy, and Theo. F. Moran, }

Edward L. Owen,
U. S. Commissioner for the Southern District, New York.

Witness,
D. J. Morrison,
Jos. P. Dockeray.

Witness,
89. Cecil A. Marks.

I approve the foregoing bond. Washington, July 9th, 1877. Joseph P. Bradley, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, U. S.

And thereupon there was served upon the said Duncan and Elliot a citation in the words and figures following:

The United States of America, Greeting:

You are hereby cited and admonished to be and appear at a Supreme Court of the United States, to be holden at Washington on the second Monday of October next, pursuant to an allowance of appeal filed in the clerk's office of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for the Southern District of Alabama, wherein 90 Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard de Watteville, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, Rodolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard are appellants, and you are respondents, to show cause, if any there be, why the said decree, rendered against the said appellants, as in the said order of allowance mentioned, should not be corrected, and why speedy justice should not be done to the parties in that behalf.

Witness, the Honorable Joseph P. Bradley, of the Supreme Court of the United States, this 9th day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
Associate Justice of the
Supreme Court, U. S. 91

To
W. B. DUNCAN,
A. F. ELLIOT.

But no citation whatever has been served upon said Hays, Pierson, Dupuy or Alexander Duncan, and no proceedings have been taken to secure them against any costs or damages for delay or otherwise upon the said appeal.

Your petitioners show that since the making of the said decree, the said D'Orelli Ziegler has assigned and delivered to said Hays, Pierson and Dupuy the bonds and coupons proved by him before the said master, and in respect of which it was claimed in his name (by said Charles Moran, claiming to be said Ziegler's 92 attorney in fact in that behalf) that he was aggrieved by the said decree of June 15, 1877; and said Hays, Pierson and Dupuy are now the holders of said bonds, and of the coupons attached thereto, amounting, in the aggregate, to $18,000 of principal.

The aggregate principal amount of bonds proved in said suits by the said Bernard de Watteville was $100-000, and of those proved by Henry Jump was $19,000, and of those proved by Masson Chavannes was $17,-000, and of those proved by said Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard was $40,000.

93 Your petitioners further show that as they have learned from said Charles Moran, and verily believe, the said Morris Ketchum has been acting in the conduct of said appeal and in the prosecution thereof, so far as he has prosecuted the same, at the request and instigation of the said Charles Moran, one of the sureties on said appeal bond; and they say that said Charles Moran acted as the attorney in fact of said Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump, Chavannes, Merian, Renevier, Carrard and Chuffard, in all the proceedings above referred to; and your petitioners have been informed by said Ketchum, and verily believe that said Ketchum has been indemnified by them or by said
94 Moran, and not by any other party, against any liability for damages or costs, or otherwise, which he, the said Morris Ketchum, may have incurred in the prosecution or defence of any of the said actions, or in the prosecution of the said appeal; and your petitioners say, upon information and belief, that it is impossible for the said Morris Ketchum to furnish the name or address, or specify the extent of interest, of any person who has assigned any of the aforesaid bonds or coupons to said Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy, who, after so assigning the same, has instigated, requested or invited any action, on behalf of such person, by said Morris Ketchum, as trustee under said mortgage.

Your petitioners further show that of the original 95 first mortgage bonds issued under the said mortgage of 1853, as reported by the master, said Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy have become and now are the holders of all except the principal sum of $726,000, and of the sterling interest bonds and coupons issued under the security of said mortgage, they have become and are the holders of all except $2,880 of principal money in amount, and of the dollar interest bonds issued under the said mortgage and coupons attached thereto, they have become and now are the holders and owners of all except $137,600 of principal money in amount, and of the Tennessee substitution bonds, they have become and now are the 96 holders and owners of all except $80,000 of principal money in amount.

Your petitioners further show that the only question made on the hearing of the said causes and cause in the said Circuit Court, by the said appellants, was as to whether or not the said coupons of 1874 still continued to constitute a part of the mortgage indebtedness, and whether or not, if they still continued to constitute such part of said indebtedness, they were entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of said sale; that your petitioners do not anticipate that in the event of a sale of said property, any amount exceeding the sum of 97 four and a half millions of dollars can by any possibility be obtained for the same—out of which provision must be paid for the payment of said Tennessee substitution bonds, which have, by a decision of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee, been held to be a prior lien on so much of the mortgaged property as lies within the State of Tennessee; and your petitioners say that if upon an appeal to this Court this Court shall determine that the said coupons do not constitute a part of the said mortgage indebtedness, then upon the assumption that the said property shall sell for the sum of four and a half millions of dollars, the advantage gained by the said appellants in respect of the bonds 98 held by them, exclusive of those transferred as aforesaid by said D'Orelli Ziegler and others to said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, will not exceed the sum of sixty-five hundred dollars.

In illustration and proof of the little injury which the appellants would sustain in case said mortgaged property should be sold and the proceeds distributed under the said decree of June 15th, 1877, and said decree should be afterwards reversed or modified by the rejection of said coupons of 1874, your petitioners show that the total amount of principal and interest 99 reported by the master to be unpaid on said mortgage of 1853, including said coupons of 1874, and coupons up to November 1st, 1876, was $9,705,137.56.

The amount reported due on said coupons of 1874, exclusive of interest thereon, was $535,106.74.

The amount of the bonds held by said appellants other than said Ziegler, adding past due coupons to November 1st, 1876, was not exceeding $204,000.

If the whole property should sell for $9,705,137.56 above the Tennessee lien, it would make no difference to the appellants whether the coupons of 1874 were disallowed, and the decree below reversed, or not. If the property sells for $4,582,568.00 above the Tennessee 100 lien, and the claim on the coupons of 1874 is sustained, as established by the decree of June 15, 1877, there will be divided on said coupons not more than $267,553, which, if said coupons are wholly disallowed by a reversal of said decree, would be divided among bondholders to the amount of $9,705,137, less $505,106.74, the amount of the disallowed coupons of '74, viz., $9,170,051, and would add not quite three per cent. to the dividends on that sum; and three per cent. on the claims held by the appellants would not exceed $6,200. In other words, in case the mortgaged property should be sold for one-half of the amount now adjudged to be due, over the Tennessee lien, and the 101 proceeds of such sale should be distributed under the decree appealed from, and said decree should be afterwards reversed, the damages which would accrue to said appellants as bondholders would not exceed $6,200.
The event in which the utmost damage would be sustained by the appellants would be the event of the mortgaged property selling for ninety-four (94) per cent. of the entire first mortgage indebtedness, and the proceeds of such sale being distributed under the decree below, and such decree being afterwards reversed by disallowing said coupons, in which events, the utmost damages which said appellants, as bondholders, would sustain, would not exceed $12,500; and if the claims of said appellants amounted to $1,000,000, instead of 102

$204,000, their utmost damage, in the contingency supposed, would not exceed $70,000. The anticipated damage would be diminished in proportion to the diminution of the price obtained on a sale, as well as also by the deduction of the claim on the Tennessee substitution bonds.

Your petitioners further show that Henry Amy, one of the sureties on said appeal bond hereinabove set forth, is a member of the firm of Henry Amy & Company, of the City of New York, and that the said Henry Amy & Company proved before said master, in the said Duncan & Elliot suit, bonds to the principal amount of $104,000, and that on or about the first 103 day of September, 1877, the said Henry Amy & Company transferred said bonds and others, to the aggregate amount of $227,000, principal money, to said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, who became, and now are, the owners thereof.

The said bonds of Henry Amy & Company were, on September 1, 1877, which was Saturday, delivered to said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, together with a printed agreement concerning the same, which bore the signature of Henry Amy & Co. with the words, "under protest," and thereupon there took place a correspondence between said H. Amy & Co., and said Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, as follows: 104

No. 1.

H. Amy & Co. to Hays, Pierson & Dupuy.

In that branch of the Mobile and Ohio litigation, being the suits brought in the Circuit Court of the United for the Southern District of Alabama, Mr. Justice Bradley pronounced an opinion containing, among others, the following language:

"Looking at the difficulties which beset the subject on every side, we think that if we allow the non-subscribing bondholders to participate in the purchase of the property, should it be made in behalf of the reorganizing combination, on an equal footing with those who have joined it, that we shall have done all that we 105 can do under the circumstances to protect their interests. The parties representing the reconstruction scheme, through their counsel, have offered to allow them to come in, and to extend the time for doing so until the first of August. We suggest that this time should be extended to the day of sale of the property. We perceive that the trustees have the power to do this—and keep the agreement on foot by extending the time sixty days at a time. We have, therefore, proposed an additional proviso to the decree to carry out this view. We hope that it will be acceded to by the counsel for the complainants and those representing the reconstruction scheme. We do not wish to dictate these terms to the parties who propose to purchase, but suggest that, in our judgment, the interest of all parties would be subserved by an arrangement of this sort."

106 On the suggestion of counsel for Messrs. Duncan and Elliot, parties to said causes, who stated that it was very desirable, if the plan of reconstruction should be generally adopted, to avoid any sale at all, and who proposed to extend the time for bondholders to come to an arrangement to and including the 1st of September, 1877, a decree was subsequently made by the said court containing, among others, the following paragraph:

"7. The court orders and decrees that the Masters may receive in payment from the highest and last bidder, bonds and coupons which form a part of the first mortgage dèbt ascertained to be due or owing by the Master in his report, and sustained by the opinion of this court; provided, however, that a sum sufficient to pay the costs, charges and expenses of the trust as above mentioned, whether exceeding the said cash 107 deposit or not, and also to provide for the payment of the pro rata dividend which shall be due or owing to the owners of other bonds and coupons, secured under the deed of trust, must be paid in money, and provided also that if the said mortgage property shall be bid off directly or indirectly by, for, or in behalf of the bondholders and creditors who have, or shall have, entered into and subscribed the agreement for the readjustment of the securities of said company, dated October 1, 1876, commonly called the agreement of reorganization, then and in that case all and every bondholder and creditor of said company not having already entered into and subscribed said agreement, who shall, on or before the first day of September next, enter into and subscribe the same and deposit their securities with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in 108 the City of New York, or with the Bank of Mobile in the City of Mobile, as provided by said agreement, shall be and they are hereby allowed to participate in said bid and purchase on the same terms and on an equal footing in all respects, according to the character of their claims respectively, with the said bondholders and creditors who have heretofore entered into and signed said agreement."

It is evident from the above that the limitation prescribed was upon the theory held out to the court of an amicable reorganization without the sale.

Subsequently an appeal was taken from that decree, and the whole thereof to the Supreme Court of the United States, which appeal is still pending and undetermined, and a bond was filed by the appellants to prevent a sale under the decree appealed from until the 109 determination on such appeal, the same equitable reasons which influenced the court to pronounce the above opinion in protection of the minority on the bidding for the property at any sale to be had under the decree, to continue to operate after the appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

As you are aware, another branch of the litigation was at the time of the rendition of the above-mentioned decree pending in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee, and in that suit such proceedings were had as to present the questions respecting the validity of the so-called Tennessee substitution bonds, and the rights of the holders thereof to a priority of lien as against the first mortgage sterling bondholders. At the time of the rendition of the first-mentioned decree the cause 110 pending in Tennessee had not been brought to a hearing on those questions; but it is apparent from other passages in the said decree, notably the ninth clause, that the Circuit Court in Alabama believed that the existence or non-existence of a prior lien for nearly two million dollars on one hundred and eighteen miles of road in Tennessee would be determined prior to the first day of September, 1877; the cause in Tennessee has been heard, but no decision has as yet been rendered. It is, therefore, palpably unjust that the first mortgage sterling bondholders should be compelled to submit to a scheme which is not predicated upon a judicial determination of the before-mentioned questions, but is at variance with the sterling bond-111 holders' rights as asserted in said suits, or indeed to any scheme at any time prior to the day of the sale of the entire road after the priorities and extent of the various liens shall have been finally determined. Acting, however, according to the measure of our relations to our European constituents, we surrender under protest the bonds enumerated in the schedule this day left by us with you, and give under protest the prescribed power of attorney; continuing, however, to do as you are doing, to maintain our interests in the prosecution of an appeal and other litigation, involving questions of the utmost importance to the real parties in interest, without any reference to these provisional arrangements; reserving unto ourselves and those whom we represent the right to revoke the powers given and to require the return of the bonds aforesaid, 112 or to otherwise act as may seem expedient in either of the following events:

First.—In case the United States Supreme Court should decide against the claim of priority set up for Alexander Duncan's coupons by yourselves or Messrs. Duncan & Elliott.

Second.—In case the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee should decide against the priority of the Tennessee substitution bonds.

And lastly.—In case the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee should decide in favor of the priority of the Tennessee substitution bonds, and on appeal from such decision the Supreme Court of the United States should reverse the same in whole or in part.

113 New York, Sept. 1st, 1877.

Respectfully,
H. Amy & Co.

To Messrs. Hays, Du Puy & Pierson,
New York Cy.

No. 2.

H. Amy & Co. to the Farmers Loan and Trust Company.

To the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company:

Please take notice, that the foregoing is a duplicate of a protest this day made to Messrs. Hays, Du Puy & Pierson.

N. Y., Sept. 1st, 1877.

H. Amy & Co.

No. 3. 114

Hays, Pierson & Dupuy to H. Amy & Co.

New York, 1st Sept., 1877.

Messrs. H. Amy & Co.:

Dr. Sirs,—We do not regard your signature to the agreement of Oct. 1, 1876, in the manner in which it is made, as an assent on your part to said agreement, or as a compliance on your part with the terms of the 7th section of the decree of June 15th, 1877. It must be irrevocable, or we shall regard your so-called protest as null and without effect.

We expressly reserve all and any rights which we may have in regard to the matter.

Respectfully yours,
T. Haskins Dupuy,
Of the Committee, for 115
W. H. Hays,
W. S. Pierson, } Committee.
T. Haskins Dupuy,

No 4.

H. Amy & Co. to Hays, Pierson & Dupuy.

H. Amy & Co., Bankers.

New York, Sept. 1st, 1877.

Messrs. W. H. Hays, W. S. Pierson,
T. Haskins Dupuy:

Gentlemen,—Your favor of this day was received. In answer, we wish to state that we are advised and believe 116 that we have sufficiently complied with the provisions of the decree referred to in your favor. We regard such compliance as obtained from us by compulsion, in its nature unfair and inequitable, as the circumstances of the case referred to in our protest could not have been contemplated at the time of the rendition of the decree by the court rendering such decree, or any of the parties concerned, as likely to exist on this day.

In respect to your suggestion that the powers should be irrevocable, we beg leave to refer you to the instrument containing the power itself, on examination whereof we find that nothing in our protest contained conflicts in anywise with the terms of that instrument.

117 Trusting that we have fully complied on our part with the terms of the decree in such manner as to preserve all our rights thereunder of what kind and nature soever,

We remain, yours respectfully,
(Signed) H. Amy & Co.

No 5.

Hays, Pierson & Dupuy to H. Amy & Co.

New York, 4th Sept., 1877.

H. Amy & Co.:

Gentlemen,—Referring to your second letter to us, of 1st inst. (but not received until the 3d inst.), in connection with your first communication of that day 118 to us, and our reply to the latter, we have now to say, that we declined at the time, and again decline, to accept the bonds therein referred to, upon the terms and conditions specified by you in either of the letters, and we declined and decline to assume the relation, or undertake the duties or obligations, proposed by you in such letters and communications, and your signature "under protest" is herewith returned to you.

We are ready, upon reasonable notice from you, given to us within three days, to deliver to you, upon your application, and receipt therefor, the certificate called for by the agreement of first of October, 1876, in the same form and containing the same particulars as other certificates for like securities, the delivery of which to you, or the receipt of which by you, we shall regard as a waiver of all conditions not expressed in 119 the printed argeement of first October, 1876. And until you apply for such certificate, the bonds are at your disposal, subject to your order, and at your risk as to loss, depreciation and injury; and we disavow any responsibility for the safe-keeping or security thereof, after the delivery of this notice.

Yours, respectfully,
T. Haskins Dupuy
Of Com. for
W. H. Hays, W. S. Pierson, T. Haskins Dupuy, } Committee of Reorganization.

No. 6. 120

H. Amy & Co. to Hays, Pierson & Du Puy.

H. AMY & Co., Bankers,
NEW YORK, Sept. 4th, 1877.

Messrs. W. H. Hays, W. S. Pierson, T. Haskins Du Puy:

Gentlemen,—We have received your letter of this day, and herewith request you to issue the certificates for the securities delivered to you on the 1st inst.

Inasmuch as we are advised that the instrument to which you in your favor refer as of October 1st, 1876, is in itself a revocable instrument, we waive all conditions not therein expressed, but insist upon a strict construction of the terms and provisions thereof, and reserve all our rights thereunder. 121

Please inform us when the certificates will be ready, that we may exchange them for the temporary receipt.

Yours, resp'y,
(Signed,) H. AMY & Co.

No. 7.

Hays, Pierson & Du Puy to H. Amy & Co.

NEW YORK, 4th Sept., 1877.

H. AMY & Co.:

Gentlemen,—We have your favor of this day, accompanying a copy of the agreement of October 1st, 1876, through a part of the signature of which a line has been drawn.

We prefer, in order that no question may be raised hereafter, that your signature should be free from erasures, and, therefore, we return the paper. 122

In your letter you say: "We are advised that the instrument to which you in your favor refer as of October 1st, 1876, is in itself a revocable instrument." We decline to accept your signature upon that construction or understanding of the instrument. Our own construction and understanding of your signature, if you send it, will be that it is irrevocable. Awaiting your reply, we are, respectfully, yours,

T. HASKINS DU PUY,
of Com., for
W. H. HAYS,
W. S. PIERSON,
T. HASKINS DU PUY, } Com. of Rights, &c.

123
No. 8.

Hays, Pierson & Du Puy to H. Amy & Co.

New York, 4th Sept., 1877.

H. Amy & Co.:

Gentlemen,—We have received your signature to the 1st October, 1876, agreement, and in accordance therewith, and with our correspondence of this date with you, we are preparing the committee's certificates, which will be delivered to you as soon as they can be signed by the Farmer's Loan & Trust Company, you giving the usual receipt therefor; but the certificates cannot be signed by that company until you withdraw the notice which you served on it.

124 Due notice will be given you when you can get them.

Respectfully yours,
T. Haskins Du Puy,
of Com., for

W. H. Hays,
W. S. Pierson,
T. Haskins Du Puy,
Com. of Reorganization, &c.

No. 9.

Day, Secretary, to Du Puy.

New York, October 17th, 1877.

125 T. Haskins Du Puy, Esq., of Committee of Reorganization of M. & O. Rd.:

Dear Sir,—The signature of Mess. Amy & Co. to receipt for certificate issued by the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, under date of September 6th, '77, for bonds deposited with the committee, reads as follows:

"Received Certificates, as per Committee's letter of Sept. 4, 1877.
H. Amy & Co."

Yours truly,
A. F. Day,
Sec.

And the said Du Puy says that said H. Amy & Co. gave a written receipt for said certificates, which receipt is in these words: "Received Certificates, as per Committee's letter of Sept. 4, 1877." 126

And as the result of said correspondence, the said Henry Amy & Co. delivered to said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy a copy of said agreement bearing the signature of said Henry Amy & Co., without any qualification, and said Henry Amy & Co. received from said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy certificates similar to certificates which had been delivered to all other parties who had delivered any of the aforesaid bonds or coupons to said Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, of which certificate the following is a skeleton copy: 127

Form of Certificate.

MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD.

CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT, UNDER AGREEMENT DATED OCT. 1ST, 1876.

This certifies that of ha under and pursuant to the terms of agreement between the creditors of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company and said company, bearing date the first day of October, 1876, deposited with of and thereby transferred to Wm. H. Hays, Wm. S. Pierson, and T. Haskins DuPuy, as provided for by said agreement, the following claims against the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, viz.: 128

DESCRIPTION OF CLAIMS WITH COUPONS.

TITLE.	NO.	AMOUNT.	EACH COUPON.	TOTAL NO. OF COUPONS.	NO. OF COUPONS TO BE FUNDED UNDER AGREEMENT.

129

Convertible Bonds (Registered), &c., &c.	No.	Interest from.	Amount.

The said claims so deposited and transferred are held by said depository, subject to the order of said Wm. H. Hays, Wm. S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du 130 Puy, and their successors, under and subject to the terms and trusts, for the purposes and with the rights, powers and duties expressed in said agreement, and upon the new securities specified in said agreement being created for distribution in the proportions herein below stated, the bearer hereof, upon presentation and surrender hereof at the depository in Mobile, or New York, as required by said agreement, will receive said new securities in exchange for those deposited and transferred hereby :

1. For the principal amount of each Sterling First Mortgage Bond of £225 each..................	$440 in new First Mortgage Bonds.
And for each Coupon thereof up to May 1st, 1877............	36 " " "
And for Coupons maturing November 1st, 1877...........	6 " " "
131 And also........................	560 in First Preferred Income and Sinking Fund Debentures.
2. For the principal amount of each Sterling Interest Arrearage Bond B, of £200 each..............	$440 in new First Mortgage Bonds.
And for each Coupon thereof up to May 1st, 1877...	36 " " "
And for Coupons maturing November 1st, 1877...........	6 " " "
Also................ .. .	560 in First Preferred Income and Sinking Fund Debentures.

Sterling interest Arrearage Bonds C, £100 each, and Coupons thereof, will receive one-half the above respectively.

3. For each $1,000 of the principal amount of the Interest Arrearage Bonds of O, P, Q, F to F 4.	$310 in new First Mortgage Bonds.
And for six months' Interest Coupons on each such principal amount of $1,000 up to May 1st, 1877.....	36 " " "

And for such Coupons maturing November 1st, 1877..........	6 in new First Mortgage Bonds. 132
And also for each such principal of $1,000....................	690 in First Preferred Income and Sinking Fund Debentures.

For smaller amounts in proportion.

4. For the principal amount of each Sinking Fund Gold Bond (Tennessee Substitution) of $1,000 or £205 each....................

£205 each....................	$626 in new First Mortgage Bonds.
And for Coupons thereof up to January 1st, 1877............	36 " " "
And for Coupons maturing July 1st, 1877....................	30 " " "
And also....................	374 in First Preferred Income and Sinking Fund Debentures.

5. For the principal amount of each Second Mortgage Bond L, R, S, T, Rr, Ss, Uu, and the Interest Coupons thereof up to the 1st day of June, 1877, dollar for dollar, in the Second Preferred Income and Sinking Fund Debentures.

6. For the principal amount of each Convertible Bond, and the interest thereon up to the 1st day of June, 1877, dollar for dollar, in the Third Preferred Income and Sinking Fund Debentures. 133

7. Judgments and Floating Debts will be settled, as per terms of the agreement, in Fourth Preferred Income and Sinking Fund Debentures.

This certificate is transferable from hand to hand, by delivery, without writing, at the option of the holder, but the holder may, by endorsement, limit the transferability thereof.

In witness whereof,
have hereto subscribed their names, this day of 187 .

Your petitioners further show that there has been exhibited to them by Mr. Adrian Iselin, of the City of New York, an assignor of bonds and coupons to said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, an original letter written to said Iselin in the French language by said D'Orelli Ziegler, of which the following is a correct translation: 134

ZURICH, Sept. 4th, 1877.

Referring, to-day, to the contents of your letter of 29th May, on the subject of the Mobile & Ohio matters, I have reflected well on its contents, and on all those (letters) which you have had the kindness to write me on this subject.

First not willing to have a suit of law in my name, and still less liking to be brought into a controversy with you, I requested our friend Mr. Chas. Moran 135 most positively to abstain in my name from a suit, and to place my bonds in the Hays-Dupuy scheme, so as to terminate, so far as I was concerned, this existing litigation.

Mr. Moran replied that an amicable arrangement would be difficult, owing to dissentients who had joined his cause, and were too numerous to accord any facility in this direction, to which I replied that it would be better to abstain from an appeal in the name of the whole against certain compensations which you will judge equitable to allow him and other persons who had become sureties, and who had studied the matter and incurred a risk in securing such a high bond.

Even supposing your party carry the day, the opposition will always find some way which, without upsetting your plans, will always cause you embarrassment. 136

These observations are simply my personal ideas, without any pretension or value, and this letter is merely to inform you that my bonds will henceforth figure in your lists.

PESTALOZZI AU THALHOF.

And the name, Pestalozzi au Thalhof, is the name under which the said D'Orelli Ziegler conducts his business.

Your petitioners, Hays, Pierson & Dupuy, further show that on the twentieth day of August, 1877, they delivered to the Special Masters appointed by said decree of June 14, 1877, a notice as follows: 137

U. S. CIRCUIT COURT, 138

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN AND Andrew Foster Elliot, Trustees, &c.,

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

Consolidated Causes. 139

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER ET AL.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

To JAMES GILLETTE and THOMAS H. HERNDON, Esqrs., Special Masters appointed by the decree of June 15, 1877. 140

Gentlemen,—We are advised and instructed to inform you that we do not regard the execution of the said decree, so far as it requires you to make a sale of the mortgaged property, as stayed or superseded by any of the proceedings heretofore taken in the nature of an appeal by Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler and their co-appellants. No bond has been given on that appeal, except a bond to William Butler Duncan & Andrew Foster Elliot, in their individual names, and they are not, as individuals, parties to the litigation. No bond or security of any kind has been given to us, and no citation has been served upon us. As we are advised, the legal effect of the bond given is, at the ut-

141 most, to stay only the proceedings of Andrew Foster Elliot & William Butler Duncan as individuals. Under the circumstances, we think it is your duty either to proceed to execute the decree, or to apply to the court for its instructions in the premises.

Dated New York, August 20, 1877.

Yours respectfully,
William H. Hays,
William S. Pierson,
And T. Haskins Dupuy,
By C. W. Bangs,
Their Solicitor.

As your petitioners are informed by said Masters, and believe, the said Masters did what these petitioners, 142 Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, say that they requested the said Masters to do, namely, furnish a copy of the said notice to E. L. Andrews, Esq.; and your petitioners, Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy, are informed by said Masters, and believe, that said Masters received from Mr. Andrews a counter notice, of which a copy has heretofore been put on the files of this court; but your petitioners say that they have no knowledge as to the truth of the matters of fact stated in said counter notice.

As your petitioners are informed and believe, the said Masters thereupon applied to his Honor the Circuit Justice for instructions, and, afterwards, the said 143 Masters placed upon the files of the said court at Mobile the opinion of the Circuit Justice upon such application, as follows:

"The suits were consolidated and treated as one, one decree was made therein, and an appeal taken in open court, and the appellants desired to give an appeal bond satisfactory to the court to stay execution. The bond presented was approved for that purpose. It it is defective for want of form I should certainly feel bound, under the circumstances, to allow the appellants to file another bond. At all events, until the court orders otherwise, it seems to me that the Masters should not take it upon themselves to decide that the appeal bond is ineffective. Of course, I am willing to hear any application on the subject that can be properly decided at Chambers. But it seems to me that it is hardly necessary for the Masters to go to that trouble. If the parties are dissatisfied with the bond it is rather for them to make application to the court or a judge at Chambers to direct the Masters to proceed, notwithstanding the appeal. 144

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY."

A true copy.

JAMES GILLETTE,
Master.

Filed Sept. 18, 1877,
N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

Your petitioners further say, that on or about the fifth day of September, 1877, they caused to be delivered to said Morris Ketchum a written request as follows: 145

OFFICE OF THE COMMITTEE OF REORGANIZATION
of the
MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY,
No. 11 Pine street.

NEW YORK, 5th Sept., 1877.

To MORRIS KETCHUM, Esq.:

Claiming to be a trustee under the first mortgage or deed of trust of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company.

Dear Sir,—We have to inform you that we are the holders of sterling bonds secured by said mortgage, exceeding in amount the principal sum of $1,788,000, and of interest bonds secured by said mortgage, exceeding in amount the principal sum of $2,146,200, and of detached coupons secured by said mortgage, exceeding in amount the sum of $730,000, and of coupons still attached to the bonds held by us, exceeding in amount the sum of $985,000. 146

As such holders, we have to request, and do request of you, in whatever capacity you are, or may claim to be, acting, to desist from the further prosecution of an appeal taken by you, or in your name, to the Supreme Court of the United States, from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, on 15th June, 1877, in a suit to fore-

147 close said mortgage, and to discontinue, dismiss, and abandon that appeal.

Respectfully yours,
T. Haskins Dupuy,
Of Com. for
W. H. Hays, } Committee
W. H. Pierson, } of
T. Haskins Dupuy, } Reorganization.

Your petititioners further show that the damage to said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy as owners of said bonds and securities, and to the interests represented by them as such owners, which damage would arise from a stay in the execution of said decree for the period 148 likely to elapse before said appeal can be regularly heard, will largely exceed one hundred thousand dollars; that besides the loss of interest and other losses referred to in the foregoing opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley, the improvement of the property is delayed and embarrassed, connections and trade contracts with other roads and with steamship companies are prevented from being made, and the necessity of acting constantly under the supervision of the court is productive of great expense and embarrassment, and your petitioners estimate the damage arising from all such causes at not less than $250,000 per annum.

Your petitioners, Hays, Pierson, Du Puy and Alex-149 ander Duncan, further show that on or about the 20th day of August, 1877, they caused to be presented to Mr. Justice Bradley, out of court, a petition of appeal, as follows;

IN THE 150

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN AND Andrew Foster Elliot, Trustees, &c.,

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD Company and al.

MORRIS KETCHUM

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD Company and al.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER AND AL.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD Company and al.

Consolidated Causes. 151

To the Honorable the Supreme Court of the United States:

The appeal of William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. Haskins Du Puy and Alexander Duncan, respectfully shows as follows: 152

The complainants in the several causes above entitled, prior to the year 1877, filed their respective bills of complaint in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, for the avowed purpose of obtaining satisfaction of an indebtedness incurred by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, and secured as to the payment thereof by a mortgage or deed of trust, made by said company in the year 1853, the said William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot claiming to be trustees under said mortgage, and claiming that said company had made default in the payment of coupons for interest on said indebtedness, which became due May 1, and had made

153 default also in the payment of coupons for interest on said indebtedness, which became due on November 1, 1874; the said Morris Ketchum claiming to be sole trustee under said mortgage, and claiming that said Duncan and Elliot were not trustees under said mortgage, and claiming that said company had not made default in the payment of any of said coupons, and that said coupons did not continue to constitute any part of the indebtedness secured by said mortgage, and said D'Orelli Ziegler and his co-complainants, claiming that said company had not made default in the payment of any of said coupons, and that said coupons did not continue to constitute any part of the indebtedness secured by said mortgage, and claiming to be entitled to sustain their action as holders of part of the indebtedness secured by said mortgage, and that 154 said Duncan and Elliot were not trustees under said mortgage, and said Ketchum, as well as said Ziegler and his associates, claiming to be entitled to restrain and enjoin said Duncan and Elliot from proceeding to enforce the payment or promote the collection of any part of the said indebtedness.

In said action of said Duncan and Elliot, your petitioners, as successive holders of the said coupons, intervened as parties for the protection of their own interests, and afterwards, the said court, by its order made on or about the 9th day of June, 1877, in substance directed all said causes to be consolidated, and to proceed together to a hearing and to a decree, and thereupon your petitioners, before said hearing was had, became and were parties to said cause, as consolidated, and were, on said hearing, heard by counsel as such 155 parties.

The said Court, by its decree or order bearing date the 15th day of June, 1877, after such hearing, adjudged and decreed in substance that said coupons did continue to constitute a portion of said indebtedness, but refused to adjudge or decree that the funds in the hands of the receivers appointed in said cause and causes (which funds consisted of the net income of the mortgaged property) should be applied, in the first instance, to the payment of the instalments of interest which became due on the principal of said indebtedness in the order in which such instalments became due; and also refused to adjudge and decree that said coupons above referred to were entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the sale of said mortgaged property before payment of any part of the coupons which subsequently matured, and before payment of any of the principal of said indebtedness, each of which refusals was, as your petitioners claim, erroneous, and your petitioners were, and are aggrieved thereby; and the said Court adjudged by its said decree of June 15, 1877, that the bonds representing the principal of said indebtedness and the coupons for interest which matured after November 1, 1874, were secured equally with coupons which matured May 1, 1874, or November 1, 1874, and were to be ratably paid from the proceeds of the property without preference or priority among them, in which particular the said decree was, as your petitioners claim, erroneous; and the said Court further at the same time and by the same decree adjudged that the masters appointed by said decree to make sale of said mortgaged property, should receive in payment from the last and best bidder bonds which had not matured at the time of said decree upon an equal footing with coupons which had matured on or before November 1, 1874, in which particular, and in other particulars, the said decree was, as your petitioners claim, erroneous, and they were and are aggrieved thereby. 156 157

Wherefore, these appellants appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, from so much and such parts of the said decree of June 15, 1877, as they were and are aggrieved by as aforesaid, and from each and every part of said decree which denies or omits to provide a remedy for the rights and claims of these appellants.

And these appellants respectfully pray that the pleadings, proofs, depositions, affidavits, orders, decrees, and other proceedings in the said cause and causes may be sent to the Supreme Court of the United States without delay, and that the said Supreme Court of the United States will proceed to hear the cause, and that the said decree of the said Circuit Court may be modified, amended or reversed, as justice to these appellants may require, in the respects and as to the matters aforesaid, and that such further or other decree may be made as to the said Supreme Court shall seem just. 158

Dated August 13, 1877.

William H. Hays,
William S. Pierson,
T. Haskins Dupuy,
Alexander Duncan.
By C. W. Bangs, their Solicitor.

159 Upon the presentation of the said petition, there was endorsed thereon and signed by the said justice an approval, as follows:

"The foregoing appeal allowed, bond approved, and citation signed, this 20th day of August, 1877.

"JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
"Associate Justice of the
Supreme Court,
U. S."

Simultaneously with the allowance of the said appeal, the said Hays, Pierson, Dupuy, and Alexander Duncan furnished the security required by law to be taken on the signing of a citation, and a citation was 160 signed by the said justice in favor of the said Hays, Pierson, Dupuy and Alexander Duncan, as appellants, and addressed to said Ketchum, Ziegler, Chavannes, Jump, DeWatteville, Chuffard, Merian, Renevier, Carrard, Belloni, Elliot and W. B. Duncan, as respondents, and so, by the allowance of the said appeal, and the acceptance of the said security and the signing of the said citation, the said Hays, Pierson, Dupuy and Alexander Duncan say that, as they are advised and believe, they were recognized as parties having an interest in the execution of the said decree, and as entitled to take, and to be heard upon, an appeal therefrom.

161 Your petitioners further say that so far as they know or are informed or believe, no offer has been made by the appellants to submit the cause on printed briefs, and that in fact the record itself is not yet printed.

Your petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Du Puy, further show that on the sixth day of October, 1877, they, being under the impression that an appearance for them on said appeal taken in open court on June 16th, 1877, was necessary in order to give them a standing in this court to move to dismiss such appeal and vacate the supersedeas thereon, caused to be mailed to the clerk of this court, from the City of New York, a notice of appearance by their solicitor on said appeal; and on the same day, said Hays, Pierson and Du Puy caused notice to be served on the solicitors for said appellants of the intention of said Hays, Pierson and Du Puy, to move to dismiss said appeal and vacate said supersedeas; that the transcript of the record on said appeal was not filed, nor the cause docketed, in this court before October 12, 1877; and that on October 12, 1877, before said petitioners knew whether or not said transcript had been filed and the appeal docketed, and before they knew under what title the cause was docketed, if docketed at all, they caused to be mailed to the clerk a notice as follows: 162

United States Supreme Court. D'Orelli Ziegler et al. vs. The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company et al. 163

D. W. Middleton, Esq., Clerk: Sir,—The notice of appearance heretefore delivered by me to you, is hereby countermanded and withdrawn; and you are requested not to file or enter the same until further advised; and at all events you are notified that the appearance is for the purpose of dismissing the appeal against William H. Hays, W. S. Pierson, T. Haskins Du Puy, and Alexander Duncan, and for the purpose of moving for a vacatur of the procedings, if any, existing upon the said appeal, and for the purpose of otherwise objecting to the said appeal and supersedeas. Dated New York, October 12, 1877.

Yours, etc.,
C. W. Bangs, 164
Solicitor for Hays, Pierson, Du Puy, and Alexander Duncan.

Your petitioners therefore pray the court that the said appeal or appeals herein above appearing to have been taken, may be quashed and dismissed as against your petitioners, Hays, Pierson, Dupuy and Alexander Duncan, and as against your petitioners, William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, as trustees or otherwise; and that any supersedeas or stay of execution heretofore granted as against your petitioners may be vacated and set aside, and leave given to your 165 petitioners respectively, to prosecute and enforce the said decree, notwithstanding said appeal or appeals; or that if this honorable court shall refuse to grant the relief above prayed unqualifiedly, then that such relief may be granted, unless said appellants shall file a new supersedeas bond, to said Hays, Pierson and DuPuy as obligees, in a penalty of not less than five hundred thousand dollars, or upon your petitioners filing in this court a bond to be approved by the court, in a penalty of not more than $75,000, securing to the said appellants, other than said Ketchum, the difference between the amount which they would receive out of the proceeds of the said sale, 166 in case the said coupons of 1874 are, on the said appeal, disallowed as a part of the mortgage debt, and the amount which the said appellants would receive in case the said mortgaged property shall be sold and the proceeds of said sale distributed under the said decree, which security your petitioners are able and willing to give, and hereby tender to the said appellants, if required by the court; or that your petitioners may have such further or other or different relief as the nature of their case may require, and as may be proper in the premises.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

W. H. Hays,
W. S. Pierson,
167 T. Haskins Du Puy,
Alexander Duncan,
By F. N. Bangs,
Their Counsel.

W. Butler Duncan,
A. Foster Elliot,
Trustees and individually by
John A. Campbell,
Their Counsel.

United States of America, }
Southern District of New York, } ss.: 168

William H. Hays, T. Haskins Du Puy and William Butler Duncan, being duly and severally sworn, do depose and say, and each for himself says, that he is one of the petitioners above named; and the said William H. Hays and T. Haskins Du Puy are the attorneys in fact for the purposes of this petition, of Alexander Duncan; and each of the said affiants says, that he has read the foregoing petition, and knows the contents thereof, and that the same is true to his own knowledge, except as to the matters and things therein stated upon information and belief, and as to those matters he believes it to be true; and each of the said 169 affiants says that so far as the said petition relates to his own acts and deeds it is true; and so far as it relates to the acts and deeds of other persons, he believes it to be strictly true.

Sworn to before me this 22d }
day of October, 1877, }
Wm S. Bainton
(L.S.) (139) Notary Public
N.Y. Co.

W. H. Hays,
T. Haskins Du Puy,
W. Butler Duncan.

IN THE SUPREME COURT

Of the United States. 170

October Term, 1877.

Morris Ketchum et al.,
Appellants,

vs. No. 879.

William Butler Duncan et al.,
Appellees.

Gentlemen,—There is herewith served upon you a copy of a petition which has been or will be filed in the 171 office of the clerk of this court, and you are notified that at the court room of this court at the Capitol, in the City of Washington, on Monday, November 19, 1877, at the opening of the court on that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, the court will be moved for an order in conformity with the prayer of the said petition, and the motion heretofore noticed for November 5, 1877, will not be made on that day, and the court will be moved that in determining the motion for a vacatur of the supersedeas which has already been made and is now under advisement, the present petition be taken into consideration.

Dated New York, October 20, 1877.

172 Yours, &c.,

F. N. Bangs,

Of counsel for William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. Haskins Du Puy, and Alexander Duncan.

John A Campbell,

Of Counsel for Duncan & Elliott, Trustees, &c.,

To E. L. Andrews, Esq.,
Solr. and of counsel for Morris Ketchum, Rudolph Merian et al.

E. H. Grandin, Esq.,
Solr. and of counsel for D'Orelli Ziegler et al.

P. & T. A. Hamilton, Esqs.,
Solrs. and of counsel for Duncan & Elliott.

G. N. Stewart, Esq.,
Solr. and of Counsel for M. & O. R. R. Co

IN THE

Supreme Court 173

OF THE UNITED STATES.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appellants,

agt. 174

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN ET AL.,
Appellees.

To E. L. ANDREWS, ESQ., Solicitor and of Counsel for D' Orelli Ziegler, Appellant.

Sir,—We have to inform you that the claims and demands against the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, proved by D'Orelli Ziegler in the court below, in the cause in which this appeal is taken, have been transferred 175 and assigned to the undersigned, William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, under an instrument subscribed by the said D'Orelli Ziegler or his constituted agents, which instrument, among other things, contains the following clauses :—

176 "First.—The said William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, are hereby constituted assignees in trust, agents, managers and attorneys of the said parties hereto, who are creditors of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, or holders of any of the securities specified in said schedule hereto annexed, for the purpose of receiving the several demands of said creditors who become parties hereto, and of realizing, converting, managing and controlling the same, for the purposes, in the manner, and with the powers hereinafter specified."

"Second.—Each of the parties hereto, being a creditor 177 of the said Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company at the time of the execution of this instrument, assigns, transfers, delivers, and makes over to the said William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, all the evidences of debt issued by said company, and claims against said company, now held by such subscribers hereto, whether in the shape of bond, coupon, note, judgment, open account, unliquidated demand, unpaid voucher or otherwise, to be held by the said Hays, Pierson and Du Puy, as such assignees, agents, managers and attorneys, in the manner and for the purposes and upon the trusts so hereinafter declared concerning the same. Upon this instrument being 178 subscribed by all the creditors of said corporation, holders of evidence of debt issued by said corporation, or of other claims against the same, the said assignees, agents and attorneys shall have and hold the claims and evidences of debt of such creditors, with full power and authority to cancel, surrender, release and discharge all such evidences of debt, claims and demands so transferred to them, upon receiving from said Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company new evidences of debt and securities to the extent and in the manner hereinafter provided." * * * *

"Fifteenth.—The said assignees and attorneys, as 179 transferees and assignees of the subscribers to this instrument, shall have the same rights and relations to the foreclosure suits now pending, and to the complainants in said foreclosure suits, and to the receivers in said suits, and to the funds in their hands, which the subscribers to this agreement now have or would have if they continued to be holders of the bonds and claims subscribed thereto, and shall be entitled to the same share of the proceeds of the present management of the property of said company, and to the same share of the proceeds of the sale of such property, which their assignors would have upon a discontinuance of said foreclosure suits or upon an accounting or upon a sale or distribution of the proceeds." 180

In the name of the said D'Orelli Ziegler and in our own names we hereby direct you, as assuming to be the solicitor and counsel of the said D'Orelli Ziegler, to dismiss, vacate and abandon the appeal heretofore taken in his name to the Supreme Court of the United States; and in the name of the said D'Orelli Ziegler and in our own names we authorize and direct you, as assuming to be the counsel and solicitor of the said Ziegler, to consent that the motion which is now pending to dismiss the appeal in this cause, and to vacate the superdsedeas granted thereon, shall be granted by this court. 181

We are, respectfully, your obedient servants,

William H. Hays,
William S. Pierson,
T. Haskins Dupuy.
By C. W. Bangs,
their Solicitor and Counsel.

Dated New York, October 22, 1877.

182 United States of America,
Southern District of New York. } ss.

Thomas W. Fitzgerald, Jr., being duly sworn, deposes and says, that on the 22nd day of October, 1877, he served the annexed notice on E. L. Andrews, Solicitor for D'Orelli Ziegler and others by delivering a copy thereof to and leaving a copy with a person in charge of the office of said Andrews, at his office, No. 52 Broadway, in the City of New York, in the Southern District of New York, in the absence of said Mr. Andrews from his said office.

Thos. W. Fitzgerald, Jr.

183 Sworn to this 22d
day of October, 1877. }

Wm. S. Bainton,
(139) Notary Public,
N. Y. Co.

No. 879.

IN THE

SUPREME COURT of the UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,

Appellants,

vs.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN & ANDREW FOSTER ELLIOT.

Appellees.

Brief on Amended Petition to Vacate Supersedeas and Dismiss Appeal.

F. N. BANGS,

Of Counsel for Petitioners, HAYS et al.

NEW YORK:
EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 BROADWAY, COR. FULTON ST.

U. S. Supreme Court,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL., Appellants, vs. WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN AND ANDREW FOSTER ELLIOT, Appellees.	No. 879.

Brief for Hays, Pierson, Dupuy and Alexander Duncan, on Motions to dismiss Appeal and vacate Supersedeas.

A motion to vacate the supersedeas granted on this appeal was argued orally at the present term, viz., on October 15. A motion is now made upon an amended petition to dismiss the appeal itself. The amended petition contains what was in the original petition, together with additional facts which the frame of the answer filed to the motion rendered it necessary for the petitioners to state, in order that the case might be more precisely understood. And the court is now moved (fol. 171) to take this amended petition into consideration in determining the motion which was argued on October 15.

The facts shown by the amended petition are these:

In June, 1877, there were pending in the U. S. Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama, three suits in equity to obtain relief for holders of bonds and coupons issued by The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, payment of which was secured by a mortgage made by that company in 1853.

These three suits were begun in succession, one after the other.

The first was begun in 1875, by William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, claiming to be sole trustees under the mortgage of 1853 (Petition, fols. 2 to 5).

The second was begun in 1876, by Morris Ketchum, claiming to be sole trustee under that mortgage (fol. 27).

The third was begun in 1877, by Charles Moran, attorney in fact for, and in the names of, D'Orelli Ziegler, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump and Bernard De Watteville, bondholders secured by the mortgage.

This was a representative suit brought on behalf of not only the nominal plaintiffs, but on behalf of the class to which they belonged (fols. 29, 30).

The three suits had one purpose in common, which was, to have the mortgaged property sold, and the proceeds of the sale applied to the payment of such of the indebtedness as might be found to be unpaid (fols. 4, 28, 31).

In other respects, the objects of the suits were dissimilar and discordant.

By direction of the parties interested, Duncan and Elliot claimed in their bill that the outstanding indebtedness embraced coupons for interest which matured in 1874 to the amount of upwards of $535,000, and that those coupons still remained unpaid (fol. 5).

Ketchum claimed that the coupons of 1874 had been paid by the railroad company, and that the holders of those coupons were not entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale which he prayed for (fol. 28). He also claimed that Duncan and Elliot were not trustees under the mortgage of 1853, and he asked to have them enjoined from acting as such (fol. 29).

Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump and Chavannes, or Moran in their name, made the same claim which Ketchum did in respect to the coupons of 1874, but insisted that they were entitled to proceed as bondholders for a decree of foreclosure, because it was a question between Duncan and Elliot, and Ketchum, who was rightful trustee under the mortgage which lay at the bottom of each of the suits (fol. 30).

Moran was the instigator of the later proceedings in the Ketchum suit (fol. 93).

At the commencement of the litigation, Alexander Duncan was the owner of the coupons in dispute (fol. 18).

He proved them before a master under an interlocutory order of reference made by the court in the Duncan and Elliot suit (fols. 6 to 17) on March 6, 1876, which was before the commencement of either of the other suits. Under the authority of this order, his claim was objected to by Duncan and Elliot, and was disputed by Belloni, a bondholder, at whose request the objection had been taken, and it was sustained by the petitioners Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, to whom Alexander Duncan assigned the coupons. Alexander Duncan also proved a claim for $75,000 in bonds, which claim no one disputed (fols. 18 to 20, fol. 33).

Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump and Chavannes had also, under the same order, and before commencing their suit, proved the bonds held by them (fol. 31).

Eugene Renevier, Rodolph Merian, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard had also, under the same order, proved bonds held by them (fol. 32).

Although Ketchum, in his bill, and Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs, in their bill, asked, as part of the relief which they prayed for, that the coupons of 1874 might be excluded from all share in the proceeds of sale, the holder of the coupons was not made a party to either of those bills (fols. 27 to 30).

The petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, are not only assignees of the coupons originally held by Alexander Duncan, but of undisputed first mortgage claims which they proved before the Master, to the amount of several millions more. They hold $8,705,393.37 of a first mortgage indebtedness amounting to $9,705,137. They hold $1,954,828 of an indebtedness of $2,053,828 specially secured by a first lien on so much of the property as is situate in Tennessee. They hold $1,793,101.24 out of a total of $2,362,463.06, secured by junior mortgages. They hold, in all, claims to the amount of $12,453,823.11, out of a total mortgage indebtedness of $14,120,849.02 (fols. 20 to 26 and fol. 97).

When the Circuit Court sat at Mobile in June, 1877, the Master who had been appointed by the order of March 6, 1876, in the Duncan and Elliot suit, to pass upon disputed claims, had made his report. He had sustained the coupons as a part of the mortgage debt, but had refused to award them priority over other claims. Belloni had excepted to the report, and so had Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, in the name of Alexander Duncan. The Duncan and Elliot suit was ready for hearing; but in the other suits proof had not been taken nor issue joined (fol. 33). But measures were taken to reduce the volume of the litigation, simplify its complexity, and hasten its termination. To this object the court kindly lent its aid, declaring (as is probably within the memory of the learned associate justice of this court who presided) that the contest as to who was trustee was trifling in comparison with the greater interests involved (see fol. 71).

The measures taken were as follows:

1. Hays, Pierson and Dupuy were admitted into the Duncan and Elliot suit to prosecute the claims which had been proved by Alexander Duncan (fol. 38). These claims included both bonds and coupons.

2. They were allowed (fols. 39, 40) to intervene and answer for their own interest, as defendants in the Ziegler suit. They were thus identified as the parties against whom Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs asked relief in respect to the coupons of 1874. They were admitted "in the same manner and with the like effect as if named in the bill as defendants and brought in by subpoena."

3. They were allowed (fols. 39, 40) to intervene and answer for their own interest, as defendants in the Ketchum suit. They were thus identified as the parties against whom Ketchum asked relief in respect to the coupons of 1874. They were admitted "in the same manner and with like effect as if named in the bill as defendants and brought in by subpoena."

4. Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, who had become proponents of their claims under the order made March 6, 1876, in the Duncan and Elliot suit (fol. 32), without objecting to the coupons, were allowed to remedy the defect by coming in as defendants and answering in that suit (fol. 35).

5. First mortgage bondholders to the amount of $5,888,920 (fol. 53), who had assigned their claims to Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, waived the dispute concerning the coupons, and allowed the claim made on their behalf.

6. In view of the fact that all these suits were brought "for the common purpose of securing a sale" of the mortgaged property, and that there were disputes concerning the legal title to the mortgage, and that all parties claiming that legal title were before the court, as well as "the cestuis que trust under said first mortgage," all parties consented, and the court ordered, (fols. 41 to 47) "that the causes be CONSOLIDATED and proceed CONCURRENTLY before this court to final decree." It seems to be apprehended by our adversaries, and, perhaps, by the learned Justice who presided at Mobile, that the present petition overlooks and disregards this fact of consolidation. But, on the contrary, the petitioners take large cognizance of that fact, and rely upon it.

7. The proofs taken and proceedings had in the Duncan and Elliot suit were made available in the cause as consolidated (fol. 46), and the proofs taken before the Master were ordered to be treated as proofs in the cause.

This learned court will perceive at a glance the effect which this disposition of the litigation had upon the relative attitudes of the parties.

1. All CONSENTED and CONCURRED in the common purpose of securing a sale. There was no antagonism on that point.

2. The rival claimants to the office and title of trustees assumed the place of dummies and puppets in the litigation. The court called the question between them a "bagatelle."

3. The creditors were constituted domini litis.

4. The litigation was transferred to the court from the master's office upon the proofs taken before him. The order of March 6, 1876, was treated as the authority for the contest, and the claims and objections received by him were treated as the pleadings. The order of March 6, 1876, and the proceedings under it, were translated to the consolidated suit.

5. The litigation was reduced to the simple question of the continued obligation and lien of the coupons of 1874 (fol. 72).

6. The plaintiffs in the consolidated suit were Ketchum, Ziegler, Chavannes, DeWatteville, Jump, W. B. Duncan, Elliot, Hays, Pierson, Dupuy, Alexander Duncan, and all the proponents of claims under the order of March 6, 1876.

These "CONCURRED" as against their common enemies, the debtor and junior incumbrancers, in the "common purpose of securing a sale."

There was no war among them as far as it regarded that purpose. The antagonism grew out of the order of reference and the proceedings under it, and that antagonism was between Hays, Pierson, Dupuy and Alexander Duncan on one side, and Belloni, Ziegler, Chavannes, Jump, De Watteville, Merian, Renevier, Carrard, and Chuffard on the other. Neither W. B. Duncan nor Elliot (after they had objected to the coupons), nor Ketchum, had anything to do with it. They were spectators or stakeholders.

In this attitude of the litigation and the parties, the court proceeded to hear the controversy about the coupons, and that only (fols. 47, 72).

In pursuance of the "common purpose" in which all "CONCURRED," it, by its decree, rendered on June 15, 1877 (fols. 55 to 68):

1. Established the validity of the mortgage.

2. Decreed (nisi redemption) a sale; and

3. Declared all the bonds issued under the mortgage to be a part of the existing indebtedness.

So far, its decree was by the consent and concurrence and in aid of the common purpose, of all the plaintiffs in the CONSOLIDATED bill.

But it still remained to dispose of the litigation which had grown up, not under the consolidated bill, but under the order of reference and the proceedings before the master, and the exceptions to his report. These were the result of the consolidated bill, but were not the bill itself.

Upon the merits of the only question controverted on the hearing (fol. 72), the court (fol. 56):

1. Overruled the exceptions to the master's report.

2. Declared the continuing obligation and lien of the disputed coupons.

3. Provided that the coupons should be received by the master, in payment for the property, upon an equal footing with the bonds.

The court did not dispose of the funds remaining in the hands of the receivers who had been appointed in the cause (fols. 4, 5). Nor did it direct what should be done with the proceeds of sale, in case bonds or coupons were not tendered in payment, or in case the price should be paid in money. It reserved these questions and all others until after the report of sale (fol. 68).

Further: The court, anticipating that Hays, Pierson & Dupuy might become the purchasers, and, under the permission given by the court, use the bonds and coupons held by them as a part of the purchase money, imposed, in advance, an incumbrance upon their purchase by directing (fols. 63, 64,) that they should allow the parties who, thus far, had bitterly opposed Hays, Pierson & Dupuy in the attempt to realize and enjoy their legal rights, to share in the purchase, if such parties should elect to do so by September 1st, 1877. But Hays, Pierson & Dupuy consented to this in response to conciliatory suggestions from the court (fols. 69, 70).

It is obvious, from the foregoing statement, that the decree was partly by consent and concurrence, and in harmony with the "common purpose of securing a sale." So far as it established the validity of the mortgage, and the binding obligation of the bonds, and a right to a sale, it was a consent decree. It was in invitum only so far as it respected the disputed coupons, and in that particular, it was partly hostile and partly favorable to all concerned. So far as it denied priority to the coupons, it favored the contestants. So far as it admitted the coupons, it favored the proponents. So far as it directed bonds to be received in payment, it gratified all alike. So far as it directed coupons to be received in payment, it partly suited the proponents. So far as it refused to distribute the money in the hands of the receivers, or to distribute the cash proceeds of the sale, it pleased or disappointed one side as much as the other.

No sooner had the decree been rendered, than Ketchum, Chavannes, Jump, De Watteville, Merian, Renevier, Carrard, Chuffard, and Ziegler, (or Moran, in Ziegler's name, but, as will hereafter appear, without his authority), elected to stand on what they regarded as their legal rights. They elected not to use the opportunity to become copurchasers with Hays, Pierson & Dupuy. They set themselves at work to obstruct and defeat the COMMON PURPOSE in which they had thus far consented and concurred. To this end, they took a comprehensive, sweeping appeal in open court, on June 16th, (fol. 75,) without excepting those parts of the decree in which they had concurred, and without excepting any party. The appeal was, in form, from the whole decree, and against everybody. They did not, at that time, offer any security, but an order was made (fol. 77,) allowing the appeal, fixing the supersedeas bond at $100,000, and providing that it should stay execution if approved and filed at any time within sixty days. The appeal was thus left inchoate and incomplete.

An attempt was made to complete and consummate it by subsequent proceedings out of court or in Chambers, on July 9th. These proceedings consisted in the approval of a bond in which Elliot and W. B. Duncan, without any affix, are the only obligees, and the signing of a citation, in which Elliot and W. B. Duncan, without any affix, are the only persons cited and admonished to respond (fols. 84 to 91). In the recitals of the bond (fol. 86), no reference is made to the fact that Hays, Pierson & Dupuy were parties to the litigation.

These proceedings left the case in the following attitude, viz., an appeal from the whole decree had been taken in open court, in form against everybody, and allowed. The appeal was afterwards defined as an appeal in which Duncan & Elliot were the only persons intended to be respondents. An order made in advance gave to the subsequent proceedings the effect of a supersedeas to the whole decree, as against every one entitled to enforce the decree, and there is on file an opinion of the Circuit Justice, which seems to the petitioners to imply, if it does not expressly state, that the decree cannot be executed in their favor, until the court shall so direct (fols. 137 to 144).

As to the parties, the proceedings in question left them in the following relation: Judge Woods, Circuit Judge, in the case of Ketchum vs. The Mobile & Ohio R. R. Co., 2 Woods, p. 532, held that Ketchum was not trustee, and that Duncan and Elliot were. Judge Bruce, the District Judge holding Circuit, subsequently, on the hearing of a plea to Ketchum's bill, decided that Ketchum was trustee, and that Duncan and Elliot were not. This he did apparently uninformed of Judge Woods' decision, for he did not refer to it as authority or otherwise. This division of opinion was not reconciled by the decree appealed from. The question was regarded as immaterial. Ketchum, Elliot and W. B. Duncan were reduced from the position of officers to that of privates. They were treated as dummies and puppets, or, at best, as parties only for conformity, and for the safety of those substantially interested No decree was made in favor of either of them. The decree was against them; because it ordered a release from them to the purchaser (fols. 65, 66). Now, Ketchum, a nominal plaintiff in the consolidated bill, joins with some of his co-plaintiffs in that bill, and four defendants in that bill, in an appeal from all parts of the decree, as well those which were incorporated into the decree in answer to his prayer and with his concurrence, as those which were granted in invitum. To that part of his appeal which affects the consent portion of the decree, he brings in as sole respondents two of his co-plaintiffs in the consolidated bill, nominal parties, retained in the litigation only for the safety of others. To that part of his appeal which affects the only substantial interest involved in the litigation, he brings in, as sole respondents, two of his co-plaintiffs in the consolidated bill, nominal parties, retained in the litigation only for the safety of others; and such respondents had, in the court below, objected to the claim in dispute, and had left its maintenance to its actual owners. On an appeal so initiated and consummated, the actual owners of the claim are omitted; and yet they are stayed in the enforcement of that claim ,under the decree, by a supersedeas granted in advance, and granted upon the theory that they were about to be cited and secured.

If there is any act of Congress, or system of practice, which authorizes this disposition of the parties and the litigation, it must of course be acquiesced in; but the petitioners, Hays, Pierson, Dupuy and Alexander Duncan seek respectfully to take the sense of this court upon that subject by moving to dismiss the appeal and take off the supersedeas.

The appellants endeavor to show that the learned court below is responsible for whatever irregularities have occurred. In aid of that position, they produce a draft of an appeal bond, originally running to Hays, Pierson & Dupuy as co-obligees with Elliot and W. B. Duncan, but the names of Hays, Pierson & Dupuy have been erased; and they say that if the erasure was not made by the hand of the learned Justice, it was made by his direction, and in his presence. The bond contains an interlineation, which, also, they say, was made by the learned Justice; but, upon inspection, it will be seen that the interlineation is in pencil while the erasures are in ink. The draft of the citation is not produced. In its engrossed form it contains only the names of Elliot and W. B. Duncan as respondents. If the bond was altered, it was probably done in order to conform it to the citation.

But, it is submitted, the law and the rules of the court must be complied with as much by judges as by practitioners. A bond, if otherwise defective, is no better because drawn or dictated by a member of the court than it would be if drawn or dictated by a member of the bar.

There are other facts material to the questions raised. Since the making of the decree appealed from, Ziegler has assigned his claims against the railroad company to Hays, Pierson & Dupuy (fols. 92, 134). They own the interest which he had. They do not wish the appeal to be prosecuted. The papers (fol. 134) indicate that it was taken in his name without his authority. It was taken in his name jointly with the other appellants by a common solicitor and counsel, Mr. Andrews (fol. 75), acting under the direction of a common attorney in fact (fol. 93).

He has, by proper authority, withdrawn from and abandoned the appeal (fol. 173). He did not join with the other appellants in their answer to the original petition filed on these motions.

Henry Amy, one of the sureties on the appeal bond, has, since the taking of the appeal, joined with his firm of Henry Amy & Co. in transferring and assigning to Hays, Pierson, & Dupuy, bonds held by that firm, to the principal amount of $227,000 (fols. 103 to 133).

Hays, Pierson & Dupuy have requested Morris Ketchum to withdraw from and abandon the appeal (fol. 146).

The petitioners, Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy and Alexander Duncan have taken an appeal, by the allocatur of Mr. Justice Bradley, (who also signed a citation on their behalf) from some parts of the decree (fols. 151 to 161); but not from those parts to which they consented and in which they concurred in pursuance of the common purpose. Their standing as parties interested in the execution of the decree has therefore been recognized, but they have not obtained, nor even applied for, a supersedeas. They have taken the risk of the proceeds of sale remaining in court pending the appeal, or of being able to obtain restitution if the proceeds shall have been distributed.

The utmost damage which the appellants Chavannes, Jump, De Watteville, Merian, Renevier, Carrard, and Chuffard (now that Ziegler has parted company with them) in case the decree below should be executed, and then reversed in their favor as to the disputed coupons, is $12,500 (fol . 95 to 102). The petitioners have in their petition, offered, conditionally, to furnish indemnity against this damage (fols. 165 to 166). But the indemnity could be furnished in another form, to wit, by the petitioners stipulating (as they now and here offer to do, if this court thinks it just and equitable to require it) to waive so much of the decree as authorizes the Masters to receive in payment any of the coupons which matured in 1874, reserving their rights as couponholders on the distribution of the cash which may be paid into court, until the appeal of Ketchum and his co-appellants shall be determined, if that appeal is not dismissed.

The papers also show (fol. 81) that the learned court below, in fixing the amount of the appeal bond, stated that it considered a bond for $100,000 as very moderate security to the petitioners against the damage which they will sustain from the delay (fol. 148).

The present motions, on their merits, are to be considered, first, with reference to the condition of things existing at the time when the appeal was taken; and second, with reference to what change of circumstances has occurred since.

The petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, have shown, by their papers, that the right of appeal, and to an auxiliary stay, as allowed and exercised in this case, is operating oppressively to them, and to an extent far beyond what is necessary for the protection of the pecuniary interests of the appellants.

The only interest of the appellants is, to reverse that part of the decree which allows the masters to receive the disputed coupons in payment. The limit of that interest is $12,500. If the appeal and supersedeas were restricted to the protection of that interest, the petitioners as couponholders would not complain, but they are so used as to deprive the petitioners and many others of an undisputed right to the enjoyment of other property of the value of several millions of dollars, and, so far as the decree affects that other property, there is not even a pretence that the decree is erroneous, nor a claim that it should be reversed.

Conceding the sacred character of the right of appeal, yet it cannot be denied that other rights are equally sacred and worthy of preservation, and that they ought not to be needlessly sacrificed to the first.

To the case at bar applies emphatically the language used by this court, in Sage vs. R. R. Co., 93 U. S. R., 412. "A supersedeas is a statutory remedy. It is " only obtained by a strict compliance with all the required conditions, none of which can be dispensed " with. Time is an essential element in the proceeding, and one which neither the court nor the judge " can disregard. If a delay beyond the limited time " occurs, the right to the remedy is gone; and the " successful party holds his judgment or decree free " and discharged from the means of staying proceedings for its collection or enforcement. This is a " right which he has acquired, and of which he cannot be deprived without due process of law."

In arguing the propositions stated below, reference is made to the appeal allowed, and supersedeas granted, in open court, on June 16 (fol. 77). Those proceedings were in form against all concerned in the suit, including the present petitioners. As against them, an appeal was allowed in presenti, and a supersedeas was granted in advance, and it is to the appeal so allowed, and the supersedeas so granted, that the present motions apply.

THE ARGUMENT of the petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, in support of their motions, is briefly as follows:

A.—As to dismissing the appeal in question.

I.—That appeal should be dismissed in consideration of the condition of things existing up to July 9, 1877, because:

1. Being left inchoate and incomplete on June 16, it was never afterwards perfected as against the petitioners, but was, by subsequent proceedings, abandoned as against them, and reduced to an appeal against Elliot and W. B. Duncan alone.

2. As finally defined and limited, it was an appeal by parties not competent to segregate themselves from the group to which they had been assigned by universal agreement, and by the order of the Court, and not competent to attach themselves to a different and independent group for the purpose of an appeal.

3. The only parties brought in to respond are nominal parties, having no interest in the subject matter of the appeal, who objected to the claim which the appellants question, and whose status as the representatives of the parties substantially interested is in dispute.

4. The appeal embraced portions of the decree which the appellants prayed for, consented to and concurred in, in pursuance of a common purpose.

5. The appeal was joint in form, but, as to one of the nominal appellants, was taken without his authority.

6. The apeal is made, even in its modified form, the basis of an oppressive, and, in its operation, an unjust and unnecessary supersedeas, declared to exist even after the original form of the appeal had been changed or abandoned.

To deal with these propositions separately:

1. The original appeal was inchoate and incomplete, and was never perfected as against the petitioners.
   20 Howard, 289, Mussina vs. Cavazos.
   93 U. S. R., 86, Kitchen vs. Randolph.
   94 U. S. R., 112, Dayton vs. Lash.

An appeal and a citation, whether the citation be actual or constructive, must accompany each other and be accompanied with security, in order to make either the appeal or the citation effectual. This was originally the law, and it has not been altered by sec. 1007 of the Revised Statutes. That section clearly couples the appeal and the security together as requisite to the completion of an appeal within sixty days, and much more clearly so as the basis for granting a supersedeas after sixty days. Here no security was given to the petitioners, at the time of the allowance of the appeal, and none was given afterwards; and by the terms of the bond given and citation signed on July 9 (fols. 84 to 91), the appeal taken in open court was defined and reduced to an appeal in which Elliot and W. B. Duncan were the sole respondents.

2. The appeal in its original as well as in its final shape was by parties having no right to segregate themselves from the group to which they had been assigned by universal agreement and by order of the court, and no right to attach themselves to an independent group for the purpose of an appeal.

By the consolidation order, which was made by consent to carry a common purpose into effect (fols. 44, 45), Ketchum, Ziegler, Chavannes, Jump, DeWatteville, Hays, Pierson, Dupuy, Elliot and W. B. Duncan were, in effect, constituted, by agreement, co-plaintiffs in the consolidated suit. They made a compact to promote the common purpose. Though they had not unity, they had community, of interest, so far as they had any interest whatever. The nominal co-plaintiffs, Ketchum, Elliot and W. B. Duncan, retained in the litigation for conformity, and for the safety of others, were grouped by their own consent with Chavannes, DeWatteville, Jump and Ziegler, interested co-plaintiffs in a representative suit, and with Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, creditors in their own right, as against the debtor to effect a common object. This grouping was by agreement, and none of the parties to the agreement have a right to disturb it in order to defeat the common purpose, by deserting their co-plaintiffs and joining with four defendants, who had been admitted into the litigation to defeat a particular claim, but not to defeat the common object. At least, the appellants had not the power to separate the group and break up the agreement without a summons and severance in the court below.

20 Howard, 289, Mussina vs. Cavazos.

3. The appeal in question should be dismissed because the only parties brought in to respond to it are nominal parties having no interest in the subject matter of the appeal, who objected to the claim which the appellants question, and whose STATUS as representatives of the parties substantially interested is in dispute.

The only respondents on the appeal are Elliot and W. B. Duncan, without any affix. They are not challenged to come here and defend the claims of their cestuis que trust. It is denied by some of the appellants that they are trustees for any one. No question, between them as trustees and any of the appellants, was passed upon by the court below, or is material here, though some such question may become material hereafter upon the determination of the matters reserved by the decree. Elliot and W. B. Duncan did not except to the master's report. They had no interest in the only question which was argued. Bringing them here brings only dummies; and when and if they come, they bring no question which this court can hear or determine. No question arose between them as individuals and any of the appellants. They objected to the coupons in dispute; and an appeal on which they are the only appellees is unilateral, and would be dismissed by the court sua sponte, or even on motion of strangers to the record.

1 Black, 416, Cleveland vs. Chamberlain.

The final controversy in the court below was upon the exceptions to the master's report; and the appellees Elliot and W. B. Duncan were not parties to that controversy. The petitioners are indispensable parties to the appeal.

93 U. S. R., 38, Terry vs. Abraham.

It would not be competent for Elliot and W. B. Duncan to prosecute an appeal in their own names, as trustees, in the interest of only part of their constituency.

93 U. S. R., 412, Sage vs. R. R. Co.

It is a just deduction that Elliot and W. B. Duncan are not the proper parties to be cited here to defend a partial interest at the expense of the trust fund, or at their own expense either; particularly in a case where the owners of the interest were of record defending it in the court below.

1 Grattan, 416, Commonwealth vs. Ricks.

4. The appeal in question should be dismissed, because it embraces portions of the decree which the appellants prayed for, consented to, and concurred in, for a common purpose.

2 Vesey, Sen., 488, Harrison vs. Rumsey.
Ambler, 229, Bradish vs. Gee.
5 Johns. Ch., 564, French vs. Shotwell.
20 Johns., 668. Same case.

12 Id., 521, Monell vs. Lawrence.
4 Paige, 476, Leitch vs. Cumpston.
1 Cowen, 709, Atkinson vs. Marks.
2 Woods, 628, Anderson vs. R. R. Co.

The facts assumed in this proposition are shown by the papers to have existed. The appellants united with the promoters of the first suit in asking for a decree of sale. They agreed to pursue that common purpose, irrespective of what might be the amount of the debt, or the respective interests of the parties. Upon that mutual agreement all subsequent proceedings were based, and the appellants had the benefit of the agreement. Now, they attempt, by an appeal from the whole decree, to defeat or delay the execution of the common purpose which they agreed to favor. But, consensus tollit errorem.

8 Dana, 12, Story vs. Hawkins.

It is obvious that the decree, as a decree of sale, can never be reversed, at least on this appeal.

5 J. J. Marshall, 638, Amos vs. Stockton.
6 Id., 508, Kercheval vs. Berry.

Even in an inferior court, a party would not be allowed to avail himself of pending litigation for his own benefit, and at the same time to set up a claim in opposition to the theory on which the litigation is based.

2 Woods, 323, Forbes vs. R. R. Co.
Id. 628, Anderson vs. R. R. Co.
13 Blatchford, 312, Stevens vs. R. R. Co.

5. The appeal in question should be dismissed, because it was joint in form, but, as to one of the appellants, was taken without his authority.

The appeal was taken by one common solicitor, acting for all the appellants, under the direction of a common attorney in fact, acting in the name of all (fol. 75, 93). Each was therefore chargeable with notice of the attorney's want of authority to appeal in Ziegler's name.

11 Wallace, 356, The Distilled Spirits.

Each of the appellants, other than Ziegler, was cognizant, through his attorney in fact, of Moran's want of authority to act for Ziegler, and of the concealment of it from the court—which vitiated everything.

If it is said that each of the appellants had a distinct interest, the answer is that in the suit of Ziegler, DeWatteville, Jump and Chavannes they claimed to be joint representatives; but Ziegler declined to unite in exercising the authority of a representative on an appeal, and exercised that authority against an appeal. The appellants Merian, Renevier, Carrard and Chuffard, as proponents of claims under the order of March 6, 1876, had submitted to the pervading theory and purpose of the Duncan and Elliot suit and could not go in conflict with it (2 Woods, 323;) and the object of that suit, originally and after the consolidation was, to effect the sale against which this appeal is taken. None of the appellants have any distinct or several interests or rights in either enforcing or defeating a sale. The several interests attach only to the proceeds.

6. The appeal in question ought to be dismissed, because, being defective in form and substance, it is made, even in its modified form, the basis of an unnecessarily oppressive supersedeas.

The supersedeas was originally granted so as to embrace the petitioners and all parts of the decree. Although the form of the appeal was changed, the supersedeas was declared to be still in force as against all parties (fols. 139 to 144). The appeal is the primary obstruction to the execution of the decree.

The petitioners are the parties most largely interested in enforcing the decree, and the parties who could have enforced it, if the supersedeas had not been taken. They are creditors; and it is in right of creditors, and not of Ketchum, or Elliot, or W. B. Duncan, that the sale was decreed. The petitioners have, by the decree, acquired a right to turn in their bonds and coupons for the land, and a right to shar in the cash proceeds. It is their right which intercepted.

Calvert on Parties, p. 56.
2 Hills Ch., 72, Chesnut vs. Champion.

In all bills of this sort, " the whole administration and settlement of the estate is assumed by the court, the assets are marshalled, and the decree is made for the benefit of all the creditors.. The other creditors may come in unde the decree, and prove their debts before the master to whom the cause is referred, and obtain satisfaction of their demands, equally with th plaintiffs in the suit: and under such circumstances they are treated as parties to the suit.

Story's Eq. Pl., sec. 99.

II.—The Appeal in question should be dismissed, as to some or all of the Appellants, in consideration of matters which have occurred since it was taken ; because

1. Ziegler, assuming the appeal to have been originally taken by his authority, has withdrawn from it by transferring his interest in the subject matter, and by express notice (fol. 92, 135, 173). It is no longer the joint appeal of the original appellants.

2. Ketchum appealed only in the voluntarily assumed character of trustee. He has no personal interest to protect. His status as trustee was disputed, and has not been established. He appeals against his cestuis que trust, whom he invited into the litigation by the order of March 6, 1876, the responsibility for which, and the proceedings under which, he consented to adopt (fol. 46). He takes this appeal (against the will of most of his assumed beneficiaries fol. 146) in order to prevent the sale, which, in the execution of his trust, he ought to promote, and in the interest of only a portion of his beneficiaries. This he cannot do.

   93 U. S. R., 412, Sage vs. R. R. Co.

B.—As to Vacating the Supersedeas, in case the Appeal is not dismissed.

I.—The supersedeas granted in open court on July 16 (fol. 77) should be vacated, because

1. The petitioners occupy a relation to the litigation which entitles them to prosecute and enforce the decree, and possess themselves of their share of its fruits.

   Calvert on Parties, p. 56.
   7 Paige, 585, Innes vs. Lansing.
   1 Wallace, 655, Blossom vs. R. R. Co.
   11 Id., 459, Cowdrey vs. R. R. Co.
   Story's Eq. Pl., sec. 99.

2. The supersedeas in question was granted in open court, in advance of a bond, upon an appeal then inchoate and incomplete, apparently intended to be consummated at a future time as against the petitioners, but from which they were afterwards, by necessary implication, discharged.

3. The bond is not available to the petitioners. It is not made to them, nor to any one in trust for them. It is made to Elliot and W. B. Duncan, in their personal capacity. It does not recognize their trusteeship. It does not clearly bind the obligors to pay any damages sustained by the coupon holders.

   1 Hennens' La. Digest, pp. 48, 49, 50.

4. The fact that Ziegler did not authorize the appeal, or the independent fact that he has withdrawn from it, or the independent fact of the dismissal of the appeal as against either of the appellants, affects the obligation of the sureties. They did not covenant to answer for the consequences of any appeal but one to which Ziegler and Ketchum were, and were to remain, parties.

5. The appellants, if entitled to appeal from a consent decree, are not entitled to stay its execution.

   2 Woods, 628, Anderson vs. R. R. Co.

   They are entitled to stay the execution only of that portion which they contended against in the court below.

6. The security given was considered by the learned Circuit Court as very moderate. The papers now show that it is very inadequate (fols. 81, 148).

C.—The court has power to vacate, or impose conditions upon, a supersedeas, where it operates oppressively, if the object of the supersedeas can be accomplished by other means not operating oppressively.

Every court has inherent power to prevent its process from being abused, or used for purposes of oppression or extortion, even where, for ordinary purposes and in ordinary cases, the process issues as of right: "and it is always in the power of a court to suspend its own rules, or to except a particular case from their operation, if the purposes of justice require it." These principles are stated in 20 Howard, 254, U. S. vs. Breitling.

42 Barbour, 549, Baldwin vs. Mayor.

And the duty of a court to save suitors from an abuse of process is recognized in 59 N. Y. R., 112, Adriance vs. Lagrave.

In the present case, the appellants have availed themselves of the 29th rule of this court to stay, by means of a very insignificant bond, the enjoyment, by the proprietors, of conceded rights of property, of the value of several millions of dollars, and this for the protection of an interest not exceeding $12,500 in value (fol. 96 to 102). If the fund consisted of eight millions of hard dollars, on deposit in the court below, and the dispute affected only five hundred thousand of those dollars, surely this court would not, if it could help it, impound the other seven and a half millions, until the dispute about the comparatively insignificant fraction could be decided.

Here the court can protect the appellants without oppressing the respondents, by accepting the offer which the petitioners make (fol. 165): or, by exacting a heavier bond from the appellants; or, by requiring, if it is just and right to do so, that the petitioners shall, pending the appeal, waive that portion of the decree below which authorizes the Master to receive coupons in payment of the sum bid at the sale. The effect of such a waiver will be, that so much more money will have to be paid into court, and it will remain there, until the appeal shall be determined. If the decree shall be affirmed, coupon holders will get it. If not, bond holders will get it.

D.—The court should not extend favors to the appellants by making any nunc pro tunc order or permitting any amendatory proceeding on the part of the appellants; because

1. Such a proceeding would be in aid of an appeal originally taken by Ketchum without authority, and in Ziegler's name against his will.

2. Such a proceeding would be in aid of an appeal, the taking of which was in violation of an agreement, and in disregard of a common purpose, in which all consented to concur.

3. Such a proceeding would inflict great damage on the petitioners without corresponding benefit to the appellants.

4. Such a proceeding is beyond the power of the court. Under sec. 1,007 of the Revised Statutes, as expounded in 93 U. S. R., 86, Kitchen vs. Randolph, the right to allow a supersedeas after sixty days depends upon an appeal having been allowed and the security given which is required by law upon the signing of a citation, within the sixty days. In this case those conditions were not complied with. The appeal taken on June 16th was abandoned, as against the petitioners, on July 9th, and no security was given to them within the sixty days.

The abandonment of the appeal, as against the petitioners, was not accidental. It was deliberate, for their names were purposely omitted from the bond.

E.—The fact that the petitioners have appealed from some parts of the decree does not impair the force of the petition.

They have not asked for a supersedeas.

If the making of a sale involves the carrying into effect of those parts of the decree from which they appeal (as it does not, because their appeal is largely from omissions in the decree), there will be no one to complain, and no one to be complained of, but themselves.

But the court can impose what conditions are proper in this respect.

F.—The appearance of the petitioners on the appeal taken against them on June 16, under the circumstances stated in the petition (fol. 161 to 164), does not prejudice them.

3 How. 693, McDonough vs. Millauden.
13 Id. 150, Buckingham vs. McLean.

G.—It was suggested heretofore by the appellants that they were aggrieved by the fact that the court below fixed a period within which they must elect to abandon the litigation and share in the purchase if Hays, Pierson and Dupuy should make it, or to pursue the litigation and abandon the share in the purchase. It was argued that the court should make some effort to equalize the advantages and disadvantages growing out of an unequal distribution of property, and compel the large proprietor (whose own industry, business skill and good fortune had made him so) to divide his rights with the small proprietor. To that end it was proposed that the court should decree a strict foreclosure in favor of all the creditors; or should direct the trustees to purchase for the benefit of all, in proportion to their respective interests. But it was foreseen that this machinery would not be adequate to the purpose of lifting the small bondholder to the pecuniary level of the large one, because the same preponderating influence would, as inexorably as the laws of gravity, and beyond the potency of any court to counteract it, legitimately make itself felt in the administration and partition of the property, and in the execution of the trust.

Whether natural equity requires (as artificial law does not) that the successful party shall share his advantages with the defeated one is a question whose solution depends upon facts—and here some facts are wanting. If the coupon holder paid dollar for dollar for his coupons in order to prevent the mortgaged property from being sacrificed in time of depression, while the small bondholder paid only forty cents on the dollar for his securities, and if the latter for years maintained a war with the former, rejecting all overtures of peace, and insisting that the coupon holder should have nothing but his legal rights—there are minds which might be insensible to the equity of giving to the couponholder any less than those rights when he has established them at an expense of scores of thousands of dollars; and there are those to whom it would not be clear that equity awards to the bondholder who has raised so loud, and maintained so long, a clamor, any more than the law allows him, when it is found out what that is.

It may be that questions of this kind have no bearing on the matter of the present petition.

II.—The petitioners submit that their motion should be granted.

F. N. Bangs,
Of Counsel for Hays, Pierson, Dupuy and Alexander Duncan.

F.—The appearance of the petitioners on the appeal taken against them on June 16, under the circumstances stated in the petition (fol. 161 to 164), does not prejudice them.

3 How. 693, McDonough vs. Millauden.
13 Id. 150, Buckingham vs. McLean.

G.—It was suggested heretofore by the appellants that they were aggrieved by the fact that the court below fixed a period within which they must elect to abandon the litigation and share in the purchase if Hays, Pierson and Dupuy should make it, or to pursue the litigation and abandon the share in the purchase. It was argued that the court should make some effort to equalize the advantages and disadvantages growing out of an unequal distribution of property, and compel the large proprietor (whose own industry, business skill and good fortune had made him so) to divide his rights with the small proprietor. To that end it was proposed that the court should decree a strict foreclosure in favor of all the creditors; or should direct the trustees to purchase for the benefit of all, in proportion to their respective interests. But it was foreseen that this machinery would not be adequate to the purpose of lifting the small bondholder to the pecuniary level of the large one, because the same preponderating influence would, as inexorably as the laws of gravity, and beyond the potency of any court to counteract it, legitimately make itself felt in the administration and partition of the property, and in the execution of the trust.

Whether natural equity requires (as artificial law does not) that the successful party shall share his advantages with the defeated one is a question whose solution depends upon facts—and here some facts are wanting. If the coupon holder paid dollar for dollar for his coupons in order to prevent the mortgaged property from being sacrificed in time of depression, while the small bondholder paid only forty cents on the dollar for his securities, and if the latter for years maintained a war with the former, rejecting all overtures of peace, and insisting that the coupon holder should have nothing but his legal rights—there are minds which might be insensible to the equity of giving to the couponholder any less than those rights when he has established them at an expense of scores of thousands of dollars; and there are those to whom it would not be clear that equity awards to the bondholder who has raised so loud, and maintained so long, a clamor, any more than the law allows him, when it is found out what that is.

It may be that questions of this kind have no bearing on the matter of the present petition.

H.—The petitioners submit that their motion should be granted.

F. N. Bangs,
Of Counsel for Hays, Pierson, Dupuy and Alexander Duncan.

EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 Broadway, cor. Fulton St., N. Y.

In the Supreme Court

OF THE UNITED STATES.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appellants,

vs.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN AND
ANDREW FOSTER ELLIOT,
Appellees.

No. 879.

Reply to Brief Filed for Appellants.

By agreement between counsel on both sides, assented to, as it is understood, by the Court, time is allowed to counsel for the parties who move to dismiss the appeal, to reply to the briefs filed on the part of the appellants.

It would not be necessary to use that privilege if the learned counsel for the appellants had not shown some misconception of the grounds on which the motion is based. Such misconception seems to render it advisable to re-state some of those grounds, which will be done with the greatest possible brevity.

The motion to dismiss the appeal involves four inquiries (1.) Who are appellees; (2.) Who are appellants; (3.) Have the appellants such a relation to the litigation as entitles them to a review in this court, as against the appellees, of the determination made by the court below upon the matters which the appellants bring here by the appeal; (4.) Does the appeal bring anything of which the court can take cognizance?

1.—WHO ARE APPELLEES.

The appeal, taken in open court on June 16th, was an appeal as against every party to the litigation. But the petitioners submitted in their original brief that the terms of the citation controlled the entry upon the record, and reduced the appeal to one in which Elliot and W. B. Duncan were sole appellees. This did not seem to them an unreasonable position, in view of the action which this court took in Owings v. Kincannon, 7 Peters, 399.

In harmony with this view, it is stated in the brief filed by the appellants on Oct. 15, in answer to the motion to vacate the supersedeas (p. 6, end of second point) that "these petitioners" (Hays, Pierson & Dupuy) "were not such adverse parties to the reversal "of the decree as would have justified the appellants "in making them respondents to the appeal." * * * "They could have had the appeal dismissed as against "them." "They are not stayed now. It was not in-"tended to stay them, because," &c. (p. 8, point 4.) These expressions seem to concede to the proceedings of July 9 the same effect which we now claim for them, viz.: that they amounted to an abandonment of the appeal taken in open court, so far as that was an appeal against H. P. & D.

2.—WHO ARE APPELLANTS.

Originally the appellants were Ketchum, Ziegler, Chavannes, Jump, De Watteville, Merian, Renevier, Chuffard, and Carrard. These appellants did not, in the court below, occupy the same relation towards each other and towards other parties and towards the litigation, which they assume on the appeal. They have shifted ground. In the court below, Ketchum, Ziegler, Chavannes, Jump, and De Watteville united with Elliot and W. B. Duncan in a consolidated suit in which they all claimed to be acting for and representing bondholders. It was as representatives that they claimed a standing. After the cause had reached the stage at which there was made (on March 6th, 1876) an interlocutory decree, providing for the admission of creditors as litigants in propriis personis, Ketchum, Elliot, W. B. Duncan, Ziegler, Chavannes, Jump, and De Watteville became mere sponsors for the litigation and ceased to be the litigants with each other. They agreed to occupy CONCURRENT and harmonious ground, sinking their differences and leaving the discord among creditors to be settled under the order of reference, they themselves agreeing to ask for a decree of sale in favor of those who should establish rights under the order of reference.

Merian, Renevier, Carrard and Chuffard, after having availed themselves of the order of reference without objecting to the coupons, and having then answered, not for the purpose of defeating the suit as a foreclosure suit but for the purpose of defeating the coupon claim, also ratified and adopted the order of reference and the proceedings under it. The second mortgage bondholders had objected to the coupons, and so had Belloni. Thus, Merian, Renevier, Carrard and Chuffard were originally at one with the second mortgage bondholders, Elliot & Duncan, and Belloni, in the court below. Now, Ketchum, Chavannes, Jump, De Watteville, Merian, and their co-appellants, disturb this grouping. Part of those claiming to be trustees, namely, Ketchum, claiming to be trustee de jure, and Chavannes, Jump, and De Watteville, claiming to be trustees ex necessitate, desert their co-trustees Elliot and W. B. Duncan. Part of the objectors to the coupons, viz.: Merian, &c., desert their co-objectors; and these two bands of deserters unite together.

It is needless to say that Belloni may yet appeal. So may the second mortgage bondholders. So may Elliot and W. B. Duncan. This presents the very condition of things which this court reprobrated in Masterson vs. Herndon, 10 Wallace, 416, and in Sage vs. R. R. Co., 93 U. S. R., 412.

If the suit of Elliot and W. B. Duncan had been prosecuted to decree by itself, could Elliot have severed from his co-trustee and prosecuted an appeal by himself, in order to defeat a particular claim, making W. B. Duncan sole appellee?

3. THE RELATION OF THE APPELLANTS AND THE APPELLEES TO EACH OTHER AND TO THE LITIGATION IN THE COURT BELOW.

It is stated in the brief filed by the appellants on October 15 (p. 5, second point), with entire correctness "that the consolidation of the causes took place subsequently to all changes in the parties to the individual suits." It is also true that the consolidation order adopted and ratified the interlocutory order of reference of March 6, 1876, by consent of all parties.

That order must be deemed to have been made after the filing of the Ziegler bill, and after the putting in of the answer of Merian, Renevier, Carrard and Chuffard. At any rate, the four last named had confined their contestation to the coupon claim, of which they, in their answer, designated Hays, Pierson and Dupuy to be the holders.

So there is no appellant here who, before the Master, objected to any bond or coupon.

But if Elliot and W. B. Duncan are sole appellees, there is no party on either side of the appeal but those who objected to the coupons in the court below, at some stage of the litigation there. That is, although the appellants did not object to the coupons before the master, they did so otherwise; and the appellees so objected at the instance of Belloni; and, on such an appeal, it is sought to overthrow the decree of the court below which allowed the coupons.

If, on the other hand, Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy are regarded as appellees, it is clear that they ought not to be herded with Elliot, W. B. Duncan, Belloni and the second mortgage bondholders, and that the appellants cannot, as against them, raise any question here, not litigated in the court below. They cannot deny the right of Hays, Pierson and Dupuy to a decree of sale, for the appellants asked for that decree. They cannot deny the rights awarded to Hays, Pierson and Dupuy as bondholders, for they invited Hays, Pierson and Dupuy into the litigation to establish, and they did not question, those rights. The utmost they can question is the right of Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, as coupon holders, if, without having excepted to the Master's report, as Belloni alone did, they can question even that right. Should they be permitted to intercept the enjoyment of acknowledged rights simply because doubtful ones are in debate?

4. There is no assignment of errors filed with the transcript, as required by section 997 of the Revised Statutes. It is, therefore, impossible to say what the appellants complain of, or claim to be aggrieved by, except by inference from the positions they assumed in the court below. They cannot complain if we explore the record to pick out errors on which they decline to put a finger.

It is stated in Phillips' Practice, p. 208, that the provision in the judiciary act of 1789, "for the assignment of error and prayer for reversal has never been treated by the court otherwise than as directory merely, and in practice it has never been enforced." No case is here referred to. It is not intended by this remark to disparage the authority of Phillips' Practice, but only to justify the observation that if the view taken by the court is as stated in the text book, it is one of those things which are authenticated more by tradition among members of the bar in daily attendance upon the court, than by reports of adjudged cases. But the same learned author shows, at pp. 210, 211 and 212, how rigidly the court, even before the passage of the Revised Statutes, enforced its own rule upon the same subject, treating that rule, far from directory, as being imperative and mandatory in the highest sense. The rule had a practical object; which was, apparently, to enable the court to determine, before going into the merits, whether the appellants had raised any question for the court to take cognizance of. The statute had the same practical, meritorious, and labor saving purpose. If one is worthy of enforcement, the other is.

It is submitted that the Court sits to do practical justice in reference to practical affairs, but not to deal with what may turn out to be mere abstractions. Here a vast property and vast interests are involved. The road in question, as the record shows, is five hundred miles long. It runs from the Ohio to the Gulf, bisecting four States. Established and unquestioned rights of property, to the amount of $10,000,000, are held in suspense at the arbitrary will of proprietors to the amount of $176,000, claiming an enhancement of their recovery, out of that portion of the fund awarded to coupon holders, to the amount of not more than $12,500, and yet not claiming any reduction in the recovery of their fellow bondholders. If the court is compelled to retain the cause in the shape in which it is brought here, it is compelled to do practical injustice to large interests; while, if it can reduce the appeal within legitimate bounds, it can avoid the sacrifice of these immense rights, without hazarding even the smallest pecuniary claim of the appellants.

F. N. Bangs,
Of Counsel for Petitioners, &c.

Supreme Court of the U.S.

D. ORELLI ZEIGLER, AND OTHERS,

vs.

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN AND A. FOSTER ELLIOTT.

A Motion on the part of Hayes, Pierson and Dupuy to Vacate an Order of Supercedeas and Dismiss Appeal.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL,
Attorney to support Motion.

Murphy & Co., Printers & Stationers, 182 Baltimore street, Baltimore.

In the Supreme Court of the U. S.

D. ORELLI ZEIGLER, AND OTHERS,

vs.

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN AND A. FOSTER ELLIOTT.

A Motion on the part of Hayes, Pierson and Dupuy to Vacate an Order of Supercedeas and Dismiss Appeal.

I. A STATEMENT OF THE FACTS IN THE RECORD OF THE CAUSE.

The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, having a railroad and branch roads above five hundred miles in length through four States, and a large landed estate, made default in 1874 in the payment of interest on a first mortgage executed in 1853, and also on other mortgages, and has remained in default. In May, 1875, Wm. Butler Duncan and A. Foster Elliott, who were recognized as trustees by the corporation and by all the mortgagees, filed a bill to enforce this first mortgage, making therein all junior incumbrances, and the corporation, defendants. They were admitted into possession, as trustees and receivers, without opposition. In March, 1876, the cause being at issue, an order of reference was made to ascertain the amount of the debt, the priorities among the parties, a mode of sale, and all other material facts, preparatory to a hearing, and allowing parties to contest each other's claims. The Master made his report in the spring of 1877, exceptions were filed to the allowance of the single claim of Alexander Duncan, and at the June term of the Circuit Court of the United States, at Mobile, was ready for a hearing, and was set down upon all the proceedings and a motion for an order of sale.

This is a statement of the first case.

2. In March, 1876, after the order of reference in the first suit, a bill was filed by a Morris Ketchum, who had been a trustee in the first mortgage of 1853. In April, 1863, the Court of Chancery in Alabama, at Mobile, upon a bill filed, had removed him from that office. He had been made a party by publication under the statutes of the State, and the old and accustomed order of proceeding under the statutes had been followed. He was charged with neglect of duty, corrupt practice while in office, and that he was absent from the State, in New York, and could not perform his duties. All sufficient grounds for his removal under ancient statutes of that State. The statutes then in force allowed eighteen months to a non-resident to show cause against a decree. But in consequence of the war this term had been extended to similar judgments and decrees from time to time until 26th June, 1869.

Ketchum had acquiesced all this while. Trustees were appointed in his place, and of others who had died, who were the immediate predecessors of Duncan and Elliott, had continued possession. The first cause was at issue before Ketchum had been sought out and drawn forth from his obscurity to claim a title. His bill impeaches the title of Duncan and Elliott, and avers he was the only trustee, the chancery decree of Alabama being void, as he alleged.

His bill is filed to foreclose this mortgage. The parties to the bill as defendants are the same as those in the first bill, viz: The railroad corporation, the junior incumbrances, and Duncan and Elliott in addition.

This is the second case.

3. The third case was commenced under the same patronage. Several Swiss or French bondholders for small sums, in March, 1877, filed this bill making Ketchum, Duncan and Elliott parties, and making the corporation and junior incumbrances parties. There is discovered in each of these documents a furious and burning thirst for the administration of the property. The extrusion of Duncan and Elliott and the appointment of one of their own nominees as receiver, was obviously the summum bonum proposed by the agent of these humble petitioners from the continent of Europe. Moran is the patron of the two bills.

Neither of these cases were in any condition for a hearing in June, 1877. In neither were there issues joined. In neither had there been a decision to entertain the bill upon answers filed. Not a particle of testimony had been taken. In some instances parties had not appeared.

II. THE CONSOLIDATION ORDER OF JUNE, 1877.

The case first mentioned having been called at the June term, a motion was made by one of the defendants to consolidate the three cases. The plaintiffs in the two incomplete cases insisted and the Court proved favorable. The plaintiffs in the first suit yielded a consent after the Court had announced its favor to the motion. This order is printed at folios 38 to 41.

The title of each of the suits is set forth; the order is represented as one made by consent; the motive is stated that the three suits had the common object to secure a sale of the property of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company. The Court thought that the sale could be made by the control it had of all the claimants of the title of trustee, and the presence of the cestui que trusts.

The Court ordered the three cases to be consolidated and to proceed to final decree. All the testimony and reports made in the first suit were to be used as if they had been taken in each case. In the decree of sale, (folios 101 to 114,) the recital is that the causes had been consolidated and set down for a hearing at the same time to be disposed of in the same decree, and in the bond taken and approved we are informed that the suits "being brought for a single purpose and were consolidated into a single cause."

The effect of this consolidation of the three suits, of the cumulation of the several demands of several parties materially inconsistent and contrary to and precluding each other, as in the case of Ketchum and of Duncan and Elliott, would have offended the most fundamental and controlling principle of the law of procedure, if it had been made arbitrarily and without terms.

The inconsistent and contradictory demands for the office of trustee, were, by the consent order, withdrawn from the determination of the Court until after the sale. The contestants abdicated, if we may use the term, the office of trustee in the cause, to secure the common purpose of a sale. No discussion took place at the hearing upon the rights of the trustees, or of their claim to dispose of the property, or to take charge of the execution of the decree. The discussion was confined to the ascertainment of the debt upon exceptions to a single decision in the Master's Report and the form of sale. The Court directed the sale to be made by its own Masters, and directed that the claimants of the office of trustee should execute a deed of confirmation and release prepared by those Masters.

The trustees, like silver in the time of Solomon, were accounted of, as nothing.

This exhibition of the consolidation order, enables me to show the case as it was then consolidated. On the record as a single case its title would be,

Wm. B. Duncan, A. Foster Elliott, Morris Ketchum, D. Oreilli Zeigler, and other Swiss levies of Moran, Plaintiffs.

against

The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company; the trustees of junior mortgages, Dunn, Young, &c., &c. Wm. H. Hayes, Wm. S. Pierson and T. H. Dupuy, Defendants.

Besides these, a portion of the Swiss guards had been ranged as defendants in the first cause—these were Merion, Renevier, Carrord and Chufford.

The two bills last filed attacked with acrimony the claims of Alexander Duncan by name, but took care not to make him a party to their bills. Upon the consolidation of the suits his assignees, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy, were admitted as defendants to defend this claim against the alliance, and they answered.

They are supported by the sanction of several hundred bondholders, having bonds for $87\frac{8}{10}$ per cent. of the entire debt of the corporation, and 86th part of the first mortgage debt. Upon the argument this claim was sustained by the Court. So that the Master's report made in the case of Duncan and Elliott, before stated, with all of its findings, was adopted and confirmed by the decree. Whatever was claimed in the bill of Duncan and Elliott was established and declared, save what was reserved under consolidation order, the title to the office of trustee.

III. THE APPEAL.

By the established practice of the Supreme Court, no appeal can be taken from a final decree affecting the plaintiffs and defendants generally, in any fragmentary way. The whole case must be brought up at the same time, and all parties must be joined in the appeal, (the excepted case stated in the 6th How., 201, and other cases are not forgotten,) in order that the grievance complained of might be examined with all the parties before it, who were in the Court of first instance.

All plaintiffs at law—all complainants in equity, are so related to the cause that they must join in a writ of error or an appeal, and so all the defendants at law or in chancery, must join in a writ of error or appeal as a general rule. The case where a distinct, separate and independent claim or issue is disposed of, is the excepted case. Upon the subject, the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the States, where there is no alteration of the rules of procedure on the subject agree.

Owings vs. Kinconnon, 7 Pet., 399.

Todd vs. Daniel, 16 P., 521. 20 Wall 152

Brockett vs. Brockett, 2 How., 238; 20 How., 280; 9 Paige, 66; 4 Paige, 102-107.

1 Ala. Rep., 126; 24 Ala., 293; 26 Ala., 461.

The names of all parties interested that a judgment shall not be disturbed, must be included in the appeal and in the bond or the appeal will be dismissed. Those only are parties to the appeal who are secured by the bond.

12 Rob. Rep., 203; 10 Ann., 232; 11 Ann., 504; 12 Ann., 71; 13 Ann., 392, 441; 14 Ann., 315, 688.

1 Hennen's Dig., p. 49, s. 11, 13.

Justice Spofford, in Lawrence vs. Burruss, 12 Ann., 483, says that where a motion for appeal is taken in open Court without petition or a specification of parties, the only test for ascertaining the appellees must be to find their names in the bond executed by appellants.

After the Court had ascertained the debt, ordered the sale, pretermitted the disputed questions of title, there was a prayer for an appeal from the decree and an allowance by the Court, with supercedeas, upon the execution of a bond within sixty days.

The appellants are the plaintiff, Ketchum, in the second suit. D. Orelli Zeigler and asssociates are the plaintiffs in the third suit, filed in 1877, and which suits formed subjects for the consolidation. The bond tells us that Merion, Renevier, Carvord and Chufford are defendants in the first suit on behalf of the bondholders of first mortgage. The plaintiffs, Ketchum, Zeigler and others, did not join their co-plaintiffs, Duncan and Elliott, nor notice them in any manner in the motion or order. Neither do the defendants, Merion, Renevier, Carvord and Chufford notice their co-defendants in any of the cases.

When we come to the bond and citation, we find that Wm. Butler Duncan and A. Foster Elliott are the only obligees, and when we come to the citation, they are the only respondents. No other party has been notified. The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, the representatives of second and other mortgages, and the owners of the bulk of the debt of the corporation, are permitted to stand aloof as uninterested parties. The Court has seen that the pleadings, proofs and exceptions question the debt due by coupons of 1874 of these parties, and the incumbrancers litigated and contested claims in the bill.

Under the consolidation order, the only personal question affecting Duncan and Elliott was adjourned. They were not allowed in the decree to perform any function in the sale. Ketchum was placed in the same attitude. What controversy, in the decree, between them was in any manner adjudged? The bond is from one plaintiff to another plaintiff, each disputing the other's title and each agreeing that an adjudication should be indefinitely postponed, as a bagatelle, in the opinion of the Court, was only involved. Nor can we assume the bond to be made to them as trustees. All of these appellants denied them to be trustees; their fendants generally, in any fragmentary way. The whole case must be brought up at the same time, and all parties must be joined in the appeal, (the excepted case stated in the 6th How., 201, and other cases are not forgotten,) in order that the grievance complained of might be examined with all the parties before it, who were in the Court of first instance.

All plaintiffs at law—all complainants in equity, are so related to the cause that they must join in a writ of error or an appeal, and so all the defendants at law or in chancery, must join in a writ of error or appeal as a general rule. The case where a distinct, separate and independent claim or issue is disposed of, is the excepted case. Upon the subject, the jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the States, where there is no alteration of the rules of procedure on the subject agree.

Owings vs. Kinconnon, 7 Pet., 399.
Todd vs. Daniel, 16 P., 521. 20 Wall 152
Brockett vs. Brockett, 2 How., 238; 20 How., 280; 9 Paige, 66; 4 Paige, 102-107.
1 Ala. Rep., 126; 24 Ala., 293; 26 Ala., 461.

The names of all parties interested that a judgment shall not be disturbed, must be included in the appeal and in the bond or the appeal will be dismissed. Those only are parties to the appeal who are secured by the bond.

12 Rob. Rep., 203; 10 Ann., 232; 11 Ann., 504; 12 Ann., 71; 13 Ann., 392, 441; 14 Ann., 315, 688.
1 Hennen's Dig., p. 49, s. 11, 13.

Justice Spofford, in Lawrence vs. Burruss, 12 Ann., 483, says that where a motion for appeal is taken in open Court without petition or a specification of parties, the only test for ascertaining the appellees must be to find their names in the bond executed by appellants.

After the Court had ascertained the debt, ordered the sale, pretermitted the disputed questions of title, there was a prayer for an appeal from the decree and an allowance by the Court, with supercedeas, upon the execution of a bond within sixty days.

The appellants are the plaintiff, Ketchum, in the second suit. D. Orelli Zeigler and asssociates are the plaintiffs in the third suit, filed in 1877, and which suits formed subjects for the consolidation. The bond tells us that Merion, Renevier, Carvord and Chufford are defendants in the first suit on behalf of the bondholders of first mortgage. The plaintiffs, Ketchum, Zeigler and others, did not join their co-plaintiffs, Duncan and Elliott, nor notice them in any manner in the motion or order. Neither do the defendants, Merion, Renevier, Carvord and Chufford notice their co-defendants in any of the cases.

When we come to the bond and citation, we find that Wm. Butler Duncan and A. Foster Elliott are the only obligees, and when we come to the citation, they are the only respondents. No other party has been notified. The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, the representatives of second and other mortgages, and the owners of the bulk of the debt of the corporation, are permitted to stand aloof as uninterested parties. The Court has seen that the pleadings, proofs and exceptions question the debt due by coupons of 1874 of these parties, and the incumbrancers litigated and contested claims in the bill.

Under the consolidation order, the only personal question affecting Duncan and Elliott was adjourned. They were not allowed in the decree to perform any function in the sale. Ketchum was placed in the same attitude. What controversy, in the decree, between them was in any manner adjudged? The bond is from one plaintiff to another plaintiff, each disputing the other's title and each agreeing that an adjudication should be indefinitely postponed, as a bagatelle, in the opinion of the Court, was only involved. Nor can we assume the bond to be made to them as trustees. All of these appellants denied them to be trustees; their sureties refuse to give them the honorary or real title. They do not state them to be de facto trustees. They bind themselves to them personally, and to them only, to make the plea good, and to pay them, and them only, costs and damages they may suffer if their principal fails.

IV. UPON THE INVALIDITY OF THE APPEAL.

To perfect an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in a Chancery suit, there must be the allowance of the appeal, a bond to secure the appellees in their costs and a citation.

The order in the Court is a commencement. If there was a formal petition, a designation of parties, an offer of bond and an allowance, it would be a valuable commencement.

1. In this case some plaintiffs in the consolidated case, some defendants in the consolidated case, pell-mell, announced an intention to appeal, and asked the Court to fix the amount of a bond to be a supercedeas. No explanations were given, neither was there any offer of a bond. The Court granted sixty days to all to make bonds.

Such an order of appeal is not to be deemed as equivalent to a citation.

The Article of the Revised Statutes (sec. 1000, p. 187,) requires every Justice signing a citation on a writ of error, to take sufficient security to prosecute the appeal to effect. The allowance of the writ, signature of citation, and taking a bond are concomitant acts. The Court decided that this being done in term time when the decree was given, citation was not needed. If done at any other time citation is necessary.

Yeaton vs. Lennox, 7 Pet., 220.

But in this case there was no bond nor citation, only an allowance to make bonds in a particular sum and with good security which the Court would consider and, if satisfied, sanction. The question is will the order in June, authorizing a bond to be made in future, fulfil the Statute in respect to the signature and service of a citation? It does not. The Article of the Revised Statutes (sec. 1007, p. 188,) refers to the cases of supercedeas only. The party must get his writ and his citation, leave a copy of the writ in the Clerk's office. The Justice ought to require, when he signs the writ and citation to take the bond required for all cases, a bond for costs. But the supercedeas follows the service of the writ. The security may be given for a supercedeas in sixty days after judgment. The service of writ of error must be made in ten days to operate as a supercedeas.

In this case there was nothing done but to have an allowance of an appeal in Court without bond or citation, and no service was made of decree or citation upon the map of defendants.

2. Within the sixty days a bond was given to two persons as if they had been the only parties to the record. These immaterial parties, too, in the appeal.

The appeal to be operative must be accompanied or followed by a sufficient bond. The bond must be made to the proper parties, and to all the parties to be secured.

Davenport vs. Fletcher, 16 How., 142.
Martin's R., N. S., 317; 25 Ala., 109.
3 La. Ann., 339; 26 Ala., 85.

It will not do to promise a bond or to manifest a purpose to appeal. The bonds must be prepared and presented to the judge and sanctioned.

Mussina vs. Cavazos, 20 How., 280.

The execution of the bond so as to perfect the appeal is a matter stricti juris. Unless it be given there can be no remedy. So this court has settled.

Railroad vs. Harris, 7 Wall., 574.

The Supreme Courts of Louisiana adopt the same rule.
12 Ann., 71; 10 Ann., 55.
5 Paige, Ch. Rep., 170.

The case comes to this court without a bond to any person on the record, save only to Butler and Elliott. Butler and Elliott have no interest in the decretal orders personally, and in the conditions of the case no representative capacity which charged them with any obligation to the other parties on the record. They were bagatelles.

No bond was proffered to any other party.

No citation was issued to any party but them.

V. THE PROPOSITION TO AMEND THE PROCEEDINGS.

The statutes of the United States exempt the United States from filing a bond as a condition to obtain an appeal or writ of error. All other appellants must file a transcript with a citatition, and the signature of a citation by the judge, and the execution of a bond approved by him as concomitant acts. Every person cited must be secured by the party citing him. The citation and the bond accompanying the transcript includes only two parties to the record as appellees. The record shows that the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company—three sets of trustees in junior mortgages—the owners of 87 per cent. of the bonded debt of the corporation, including first mortgage debt, are parties defendant in this consolidated suit on the record, and are not noticed in any petition for appeal in any bond, in any citation. We have testimony of the appellants that they were not esteemed to be material parties to any appeal. The motion does not in any direct or intelligible way include them, and they are excluded in all other papers filed.

The same confusion of thought appears in the organization of the bond of appellants. Ketchum, the sole plaintiff in the second suit, was combined and consolidated with Duncan and Elliott, and D. Orelli Zeigler and his Swiss guard combined and consolidated with Ketchûm and Duncan and Elliott. The second phalanx of Swiss was ranged by their leader as defendants in the suit of Duncan and Elliott. In the appeal the Swiss and Ketchum plaintiffs set upon their co-plaintiffs, and the phalanx deserted the side of defendants and joined their countrymen, to destroy Duncan and Elliott on appeal. It is apparent that their notion was to leave the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company the junior incumbrances, the owners of 87 per cent. of the bonded debt at Mobile till they had finished their combat at Washington with Duncan and Elliott, the only parties cited, the only parties assured, the sole respondents. What order can this Court make to rectify the alignments among these parties? To place plaintiffs on the same line involves the destruction of the only bonds and citations to be found in the record of the case. To enable Merian, Renevier and Carvord (Cephise Chufford is a woman, and probably vivandiere of this phalanx,) to return among the defendants they must go back to the Court in Mobile, obtain appeal in the name of all defendants, and summon and sever those who have a place on the record to elect their position if that be unpleasant to them.

Todd vs. Daniel, 16 Pet., 521.

VI. ON THE AMENDMENT.

The Statutes of the United States establish rules for bringing cases into this Court. They make no accommodation with errors, mistakes, blunders or other effeminate practice. It is no easy matter, sometimes, for a Judge at New Orleans to determine whether a case is equitable or legal. This Court rejects a case in Chancery brought up by writ of error, or a case at law brought up by appeal. The parties cannot plead error in the Judge so as to amend—much less his counsel to them for relief. A Judge has signed a writ of error in which the parties were not included or described, or a citation variant, or a bond to a wrong party, but this Court did not allow a correction.

16 How., 142-144.

The Judge has taken an insufficient bond to operate as a supercedeas—the Court did not allow a new bond to be made.

16 How., 135.

The Court has generally refused to qualify, or to modify, or to bend these Statutes.

VII. ON THE AMENDMENT AND AS TO THE FACTS.

The suit of Duncan and Elliott was commenced and conducted to an issue, without opposition as to their title, before Morris Ketchum made his appearance with Belloni, who proves six bonds.

The Swiss opposition of Moran commenced after the Master had nearly completed his report upon the entire case.

Ketchum filed his bill, but had not, in more than a year's time, brought it to issue.

The bill of the Swiss came in shortly before the case of Duncan and Elliott had set down the case for a hearing. They had not brought the parties into Court.

None of these were defendants in the other case. These parties all were admitted by the Court, at the hearing of the case, on the consolidation order.

They pleaded the purpose is the same in all the suits. All desire a sale of the property; all want the property out of Court.

This most important prayer in every bill can be granted by the Court for the benefit of every creditor, without trial of the trustee's title. The consolidation order as made they solicited and moved for, we consenting, so that the common purpose might be allowed.

We were fully prepared. The Court's decree corresponds entirely with the case prepared by Duncan and Elliott. That case was opposed in respect only to one claim presented to the Master.

All these Swiss claimants proved before that Master, without opposition, all are confirmed as creditors, by the decree confirming the report.

Upon the rendition of the decree, all of these new comers prayed for the allowance of an appeal from said decree, and it is granted and allowed. But the conditions to complete it according to the Statutes of the United States are inseparable from such an order and could not be dispensed with. These conditions have not been performed; the record shows no performance. They are now before the Court upon a default. They ask something from the Court as bounty to relieve them from the consequences of default. We answer that the consideration for consent to the consolidation was, that all the parties to that consent had a common purpose and desire to have the property sold. By the consent to this consolidation given by the plaintiffs, every one of these parties became parties to the record and were heard. They might have appealed against the decree without a supercedeas or appealed to reëxamine the claims of Alexander Duncan, but the precise purpose of this appeal is to defeat the COMMON purpose which they claimed to desire and came to promote. It appears that there are a small minority of the creditors of the corporation. Their whole claim, as shown in their pleadings, is a trifle as compared with the others. Their procrastination in bringing suits and in becoming parties to the litigation and the irregularities in their proceedings show that obstruction is their main purpose.

The damages they may sustain from a sale, is obviously a minimum as compared with the injury to other parties by a delay for two or three years.

The mass of the creditors have agreed to measures of settlement. The same proposition was tendered to every bondholder, and the Court renewed the proposition with the consent of the trustees and all the counsel, to continue till September, 1877. The measures are liberal and just. But these parties reject them, and say that they will concede nothing of their legal rights. They, as first mortgage bondholders, will take what the law entitles them to and not less. But now having committed gross irregularities, and been guilty of manifest defaults, they ask for lenity, and pray for extreme, not to say licentious, indulgence.

The answer may be made that having sought for legal claims, and those only they should be content with what the law gives to them. Hast thou appealed to Cæsar, then by Cæsar, thou shalt be judged—the law must be followed.

The Court will see among the bondholders persons having large interests, and persons having one, two and ten bonds, several hundred in all.

These several hundred persons, holding twelve millions of the debts of this corporation, combined to make a settlement on terms which the Judges of the Circuit Court commended as equitable. Is there any justice in the generosity or liberalty, or indulgence, which postpones the adjustment of their claims under the decree by a sale of the property under the existing conditions? These appellants still may prosecute an appeal, under legal conditions and a proper procedure.

JOHN A CAMPBELL,
Attorney to Support Motion.

In the Supreme Court of the U. S.

No. 879.

MORRIS KETCHUM, ET AL.,

vs.

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN AND A. FOSTER ELLIOTT.

Motion for the Dismissal of the Appeal.

I.

The Supreme Court of the United States exercises its jurisdiction over the final decrees of Circuit Courts only, through an appeal made by a party or parties to the decree, and aggrieved by a decision of that Court. The appeal is designed to place the cause in the Supreme Court in the plight and condition it had in the Circuit Court. The plaintiffs prosecuting an appeal must notify the appellee, assure him against the loss of costs and in case of stay of execution, against damages in event of the failure of the appeal. All the parties to the suit who have any interest in the maintenance of the decree must be a party to the appeal, as appellants or appellees.

Rev'd Statutes, secs. 692, 992, 1000, 1007, 1012.

Simpson vs. Greeley, 20 Wall., 153; 9 Paige, 66; 34 Barb., 594; 6 Paige, 273; 11 Wend., 227.

II.

The suit above mentioned was organized into its present form at the hearing in the Circuit Court in June, 1877. Three suits with distinct plaintiffs, were, by the order of the Court and consent of the parties, consolidated so as to form one suit to be disposed of by the same decree. (Fols. 43 and 47.) The Court disposed of the consolidated suit by the same decree the 15th June, 1877. (Fols. 51 and 68.) The consolidation order and the decree assume, that the legal title to all the property is vested in some parties to the consolidated suit. That it was not material to designate this trustee prior to the sale of the property. That all of the equities under the mortgage could be determined irrespective of that issue, and that the claimants might, after the sale of the property, be required to confirm the sale, and release to the purchasers. Thus the common purpose of all the suits pending and which were consolidated could be accomplished. The decree was so framed. Upon the promulgation of this decree nine persons prayed an appeal from the decree signed with supercedeas.

One of these persons is Morris Ketchum. He claimed in his bill he was the only trustee. He contested the title of Duncan and Elliott, and brought his suit to foreclose against the mortgagor (Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company) and the junior incumbrancers, who were the defendants in all of the three suits consolidated. The court did not determine the claim of Ketchum. It was reserved with his consent. He has no interest in any question settled in the decree. His appeal is made against Duncan and Elliott, his co-plaintiffs. He gives to them a bond and a citation, and to none other. Their relations to the decree are the same as his own, and neither of them in the form of the suit under the consolidation are entitled to dispute the decree of sale. A party bringing an appeal must have a direct interest in the matter of the decree upon which the appeal is taken.

Idley vs. Bowen, 11 Wend., 227.
Cuyler vs. Moreland, 6 Paige, 223.
7 Paige, 18; 48 Penn., 328.

III.

Morris Ketchum, the plaintiff in one of the consolidated suits, is joined by Orelli Zeigler and three associates, plaintiffs in the third of the consolidated suit. They unite in the bond and the citation, and select Duncan and Elliott as sole obligees and respondents. This suit was for themselves and those who would join them in the suit as bondholders. Ketchum and Duncan and Elliott were defendants and the railroad company ~~are~~ an junior incumbrancers.

This appeal against their co-plaintiffs in the consolidation, against a decree made to carry out the common perpose, in conjunction with Ketchum, seems to establish that there was a latent purpose in the institution of the suits, which the court did not discover. This purpose was to embarrass the prosecution of any suit, for the purpose of making a sale or other settlement of the property. The only purpose manifest is to have some share in the control and disposition of the property. Duncan and Elliott fill the eyes and the thoughts of the appellants. Their papers designate no other parties. The joinder of these co-plaintiffs with Ketchum in the appeal only aggravates existing irregularities, and increases their number.

IV.

But this Comedy of Errors is made more sensational by the introduction of Merian, Renevier, Chufford and Carrord. These Swiss bondholders, came into the suit of Duncan and Elliott after the case was set down for a hearing and had been called. They hold ten bonds each. They are described in the bond as defendants on behalf of first mortgage bondholders. These four defendants in the Duncan and Elliott suit, and defendants in the consolidated suit, in which Morris Ketchum and Zeigler and associates are plaintiffs combine with these parties to appeal.

They select Duncan and Elliott as sole appellees or respondents. The emptiness of the pretensions of these eight bondholders is shown by the fact that they own about two hundred bonds, and above 86 per cent. of the whole first mortgage debt is held by Hayes, Pierson and Dupuy parties to the record of the cause—parties to the decree, and yet have no part in this appeal whether as appellants or appellees. The aim of the appeal seems to be to hold the property from sale and to obstruct the settlement of the affairs of the corporation.

V.

It is a rule of Equity pleading that parties having conflicting interests should not be joined as complainants in the same suit, and rarely are defendants allowed to contest conflicting claims with one another.

9 Paige 255, 1 Cushing 86.
2 Bland 264, 3 Gray 308.
3 B. Mon. 581.

The Consolidation order embodies an explanation and an apology for the consolidation of suits where there was an irreconcilable conflict among the respective plaintiffs as to their title to the property. It adjourned the controversy until after the equity of the parties under the mortgages had been settled, the property sold and distributed, the deeds made and the only question open was concerning allowances, expenses, &c.

By this order consented to by all the parties to the cause, the trustees were all postponed. The Court in the order notices that all the cestui que trusts were before the Court. Hayes, Pierson and Dupuy represented some several hundreds holding $\frac{87}{100}$ of all the bonded debt of the Company.

Nevertheless, an appeal is allowed to Morris Ketchum, one plaintiff: Orelli Zeigler and three other plaintiffs and to four defendants, to contest the decree rendered, with only Duncan and Elliott as appellees and obligees in the appeal bond.

VI·

An appeal may be granted in open court by motion or by petition. A careful solicitor or judge will prefer that the application shall be made in writing and when the case is at all complex, that the parties be designated and their place in the appellate court defined—when this is done we agree that the allowance of an appeal in open court dispenses with a citation.

This dispensation is borrowed from the rules of procedure in cases of appeal under the civil law. The Code of Louisiana, prescribes "that when an appeal has been granted in open Court, the Judge shall fix the amount of security and cause the same with the order allowing the appeal to be entered upon the minutes of the Court, and in such case no citation or other notice to appellee shall be necessary." But the adoption of this ancient rule of practice does not dispense the appellants from making proper persons appellants, nor does it diminish their obligation to designate the appellees, and to furnish them with the good and sufficient security the statute requires.

The appellant must give the bond, payable to the proper parties, and no person omitted is a party.

Lawrence vs. Burrus, 12 La. Ann., 483
Davenport vs. Fletcher, 16 How., 142.
6 Martin's R., N. S., 317.

VII.

When the origin of the suit of Morris Ketchum is considered, that he was searched for, and is indemnified by parties who are not in this cause as plaintiffs or as defendants. When we find these foreign bondholders from Switzerland coming after the proof of their claims, and when the Master's report was about to be closed with a new bill in one aspect to forclose the mortgage, and in another aspect maligning the trustees and receivers, to extrude them though they were supported by holders of $\frac{87}{100}$ of the bonded debt of the corporation. When we notice the fact that a single person dictates their movements, arranges their plans, furnishes their bond, and is patron of his own scheme of reorganization, the conclusion is irresistible that the appellants are mere puppets, and that the appeal does not faithfully, truthfully, sincerely represent the creditors it professes to represent, and that the purpose on the part of the mover, is contrary to social duty, and designed to embarrass, prolong, and obstruct the settlement of the affairs of the corporation and the creditors under the mortgage. Such a suit is reprobated in Courts of Chancery as illusory, vexatious, a mere mockery—a device of the barrator, who like horse leeches suck only, the corrupted blood of the law. Cases are quoted in which all relief is refused to such suitors.

Robson vs. Dodds, L. R. 8 Eq. cases 301.
Forrest vs. M. S. & L. R. Co. 4 D. F. & J. 126.
L. R. 3 Eq. case 422.

VIII.

But the irregularity we notice in respect to the joinder of the plaintiffs and the selection of appellees becomes more apparent, when we connect them with the decree under examination. The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company is mortgagor, and held the equity of redemption and was defendent in all of the suits, and without which none could have been heard.

The Junior incumbrancers, representing an equity of redemption and several millions of second mortgage debt, and three persons, Hayes, Pierson and Dupuy who held 87 per cent. of all of the debt, and Alexander Duncan whose claims were impeached and are impeached, are also defendants of whom no notice has been taken in any of the proceedings to perfect the appeal. No citation, no bonds for them.

This Court has no jurisdiction to alter a decree in any particular, unless the party interested to sustain the decree be cited; ex parte Crenshaw, 15 Peters S. C. R., 115. Without the presence of the parties it will not proceed to hear an appeal.

34 Barb., S. C. R., 594.
4 Paige Ch. R., 102.
47 N. Y. Rep., 677.
2 Barb. Ch. R., 430.

For the reasons before mentioned, and those set forth in a brief filed previously, we pray a dismissal of the appeal.

J. A. CAMPBELL,
Sol. for Duncan and Elliott.

MURPHY & CO., PRINTERS, BALT.

Supreme Court of the United States.

ZEIGLER et al.
vs.
DUNCAN & ELLIOTT.

No. 879.

When this decree was rendered, the present appellants, being holders of the bonds of the Mobile & Ohio R. R. Company, prayed an appeal in open court, and this was allowed.

A bond to operate as a supersedeas was approved within the time fixed by the court, and this bond has been here adjudged to be in all respects good.

The motion is now made to dismiss the appeal.

Such a motion can only be heard on the record as it stands, no statements or certificates dehors the record can be received in support of it.

Hudgins vs. Kemp, 18 How., 530.

The appeal is not inoperative because of the suggestion that Zeilger has deserted it. It remains effective on behalf of the other appellants.

Todd vs. Daniel, 16 Pet., 523.

Nor will the court go into the Record for the purpose of declaring whether other parties should have been joined in the appeal.

The appeal was allowed specifically to the present appellants and to no others.

On such a motion for the dismissal of a writ of error,

" want of jurisdiction and irregularity of the writ are the only grounds for dismissal. Where a judgment has been rendered which the party is entitled to have reversed in the court and it comes here for such reasons upon proper process duly issued, all other questions must await the final hearing.

Hicker vs. Fowler, 1 Bl. 95;
New Orleans Railroad vs. Morgan, 10 Wall. 256;
Day vs . Washburn, 23 How. 309.

These principles are alike applicable to appeals. And we submit, that on this motion, the appeal cannot be dismissed if the record shows—

1st. A final decree;

2d. That the appellants were parties in interest and parties to the record;

3d. That the amount in controversy is within the jurisdiction;

4th. That appeal was duly prayed for and allowed.

As to citation, if the appeal had been allowed out of term, the motion to dismiss for want of citation would not be allowed, for the court would impose such terms on the appellant as justice might require.

Dayton vs. Lash, 94, U. S. 112.

But here citation was not necessary, the appeal having been granted at the term and in open court; and, as the validity of the bond has been already determined, the appeal cannot be dismissed if the record answers these propositions in the affirmative, which we submit it clearly does.

P. PHILLIPS,
For Appellant.

Morrison & Nathan, Law Printers, 23 Dey Street, N. Y,

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

Morris Ketchum et al.,
Appellants,

vs.

William Butler Duncan et al.,
Appellees.

Brief for Appellants, on Motion to dismiss Appeal.

There can be no motion regularly before the Court at the present time, except, perhaps, the motion to dismiss the appeal.

On the 8th day of October the appellants were served with papers purporting to be "Petition and Notice to dismiss Appeal and vacate Supersedeas."

The former portion of the motion was made returnable on November 5th, and the latter on October 15th, though both motions were made on the same papers.

In pursuance of that notice, the motion to vacate supersedeas (to increase the amount of the appeal bond, and to permit the appellees to execute the decree on giving a bond to the appellants) was argued before this Court on October 15th ult. While that motion was under advisement by the Court, and after the appellants were served with the brief on the motion to dismiss, they were subsequently, on October 22d, served with papers entitled, "Amended Petition and Notice on Motion to Dismiss Appeal and Vacate Supersedeas," and two "Briefs on Amended Petition to vacate Supersedeas and Dismiss Appeal." These papers were accompanied by a notice of withdrawal of the motion to dismiss, theretofore noticed for November 5th, and stating that on November 19th that motion would be renewed. "And the Court will be moved that in determining the motion for a vacatur of the supersedeas which has already been made and is now under advisement, the present petition be taken into consideration." About the same time, the Court was requested in writing by the moving parties to withhold its decision, to enable them to avail of the aforesaid new papers, not used on the hearing. This request the appellants opposed. Paragraph 4, Rule 20.

On the 29th of October, the Court rendered its decision denying the motion or motions which had been made. On the 5th of November the moving parties withdrew in open Court their motion to dismiss, made for that day.

There is now left the motion above described made for November 19th, and based on voluminous papers and briefs purporting on their face to refer to the various motions to vacate the supersedeas, increase the bond and other matters already decided by this Court. We submit that motions already heard cannot be reargued in this way. No rehearing has been granted by the Court; nor would we be compelled to submit to a reargument of motions of the character of those already decided, without any opportunity for oral discussion.

The form in which this case is now presented to the Court, imposes upon us the necessity of selecting from the papers served on us, those portions which may relate to the motion to dismiss, and of disregarding those matters which have already been determined by the Court.

We have not deemed it necessary to submit affidavits rebutting the many irrelevant matters in the papers of the moving parties. The Opinion of this Court, and the Answer already filed by us, sufficiently set forth the material facts. The grounds of dismissal, as near as we can ascertain them, intermingled as they are with the grounds of the previous motions, appear to be as follows:

FIRST.

That the order of consolidation deprived all the trustees and the claimants to the trusteeship of their title to the trusteeships for the future of the litigation, and it is deduced from that premise, that they are not competent to sustain the appeal, and that there is a relegation to the various bondholders of record for the further progress of the litigation.

The Associate Justice sitting in Circuit, who made the order of consolidation, granted the appeal thereunder, and determined the admission of the parties thereto. There is a total misconception in the papers of the moving parties in regard to the consolidation, and that appears to be basis of these motions. There was a distinct recognition of the trusteeship of all the claimants for the purposes of this cause, and that too by consent. Only in this way could the proceedings in the Duncan suit be utilized, because the Circuit Court had just decided that the decree of the Alabama Court rendered in 1863 against Ketchum in New York, attempting to take away his estate on the sole ground that he was an "alien enemy of the Confederate States," was null and void.

Besides, one of the suits brought by the foreign bondholders making all the claimants to the trusteeship, defendants, was for the purpose of eliminating that question from the litigation. But the Court, instead of entering the decree under that suit, consolidated the suits brought by Ketchum and Duncan with it, thus preserving the position of those parties to the litigation.

As the opinion just rendered by this Court determines, it was Duncan and Elliott claiming the legal title to represent the coupons as well as the bonds, that the appellants were bound to consider in framing their appeal. Indeed it is difficult to conceive how Duncan and Elliott can complain of the appeal as against Hays, Dupuy and Pierson for the non-joinder of these latter. The Brief filed on the previous motion shows that Duncan and Elliott were the only successful parties below, and the only parties who control the execution of the decree. The appeal in open Court at the same term was ample notice to intervenors fully represented by them, those intervenors having entered a general appearance in this Court, and being themselves appellants from the decree.

SECOND.

It is claimed that the appeal is in improper form, and one of the parties has withdrawn. The appeal was prayed in open Court at the same term, and on the same day on which the decree was entered and was then and there granted. The prayer for appeal was reduced to writing, specifying the various terms of the consolidated causes, and was entered on the minutes of the Court. When the Court considered and passed upon it, after argument, none of these objections now urged to the form of the appeal were suggested to the Court below. Then they might have been corrected, if well founded. For instance: whether complainants in one of the suits which were consolidated could unite in the appeal with defendants in another of those suits. That was an entirely different question, as this litigation was then presented to the Circuit Court, from such a question in the case of a single suit, and the consolidation was in the judgment of the lower Court, and is scarcely revisable here, at least on a motion.

As to the authority to use the name of one of the appellants, Mr. Ziegler, his own letter is sufficient evidence of that, and the original in a foreign language we have demanded from our opponents in order to place it or an impartial translation before the Court, but without success in obtaining it. With abundant proofs of authority from Mr. Ziegler we shall not encumber the files of the Court.

There is nothing whatever to justify the claim that the appeal was joint. The prayer for appeal and all the proceedings, the bond, the citation, all negative such an assumption.

Besides the trustee, several individual bondholders, they being parties to the several suits which were consolidated, were by order in the consolidated cause permitted to become appellants, and to represent six hundred thousand dollars of bonds, and they are sufficient, without Ziegler's eighteen bonds, to sustain the appeal. The very interests and relations of the parties appellant—trustee, and cestuis que trust—the later being several and individual bondholders, on its face rebuts any pretence of a joint appeal or any subjection to the rules that control appeals by joint parties to the record.

THIRD.

Claimed that Hays, Dupuy and Pierson are not cited.

There has been abundant and indeed superabundant citation.

None was needed on an appeal taken as this was in open Court at the same term.

The additional citation to Duncan and Elliott was supererogatory.

The general appearance of Hays, Dupuy and Pierson would obviate the defect, if any. The effort to withdraw that appearance was unavailing. As the object of citation is notice, such a withdrawal if allowed, would be permitting parties to declare solemnly on the record that they have notice, and then pretend for the purposes of a motion, that they have not notice.

The opinion already rendered by the Court really

FOURTH.

The motion claims that a bond for costs should have been given simultaneously with the grant of the appeal.

A bond for costs and damages has been approved and filed. This Court has adjudged that bond to be valid and sufficient to stay execution. That a bond for costs must be given instanter with the appeal to render it effectual has been denied by repeated decisions of this Court, and it has been held that it may be given afterwards.

The position that a bond should have been given to Hays, Dupuy and Pierson for costs, in order to make an effectual appeal as against them is disposed of by the decision of this Court just rendered, for it can scarcely be claimed that if they be not necessary parties to a supersedeas bond they are necessary parties to a bond for costs. It would follow from that position, that though they are stayed, there is no appeal pending. The Court has in fact decided that there is a bond for their benefit for costs and damages too.

FIFTH.

It is claimed that because we asked for a sale of the road we cannot appeal from a decree on the main question—For whose benefit is that sale to be had? That is, if something is decreed on behalf of other interests, it precludes an appeal by the defeated party if the character of relief granted is similar to what he would have desired on his own behalf.

See Folio 57
" " 41 to 52

No. 879.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

MORRIS KETCHUM et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN et al.,
Appellees.

Answer of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, to Petition of Hays et al., to be Heard Nov. 19, 1877.

GEORGE N. STEWART,
Solicitor and of Counsel for
THE MOBILE & OHIO R. R. CO.

NEW YORK:
EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 BROADWAY, CORNER FULTON STREET.

In the Supreme Court 1

OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

In the Matter of the amended Petition and Notice, on motion to dismiss the appeal of Morris Ketchum and others against William Butler Duncan and others, in the cause No. 879, in said court, which motion is to be made in said court by William Butler Duncan, Andrew Foster Elliot, William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. Haskins Dupuy and Alexander Duncan, on the 19th of November, 2 1877, as per notice of motion.

The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, by its counsel, answering the said petition, admits notice of said proposed motion; and it admits the substantial truth of the matters stated in said petition, and in behalf of the interests of its stockholders, The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company protests against the said appeal of said Ketchum and others, and unites with the said petitioners in said motion, and prays that the same may be granted, and that the said appeal may be dismissed at the cost of said appellants.

And in support of said petition and motion, and of 3
this answer, The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company

4 submits that there was no question pending in the court below between Morris Ketchum, one of the appellants on said appeal, or any other of the said appellants, and William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, the appellees on said appeal, which can be the subject of an appeal to this court. And the counsel for the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company refers this court to the following case, reported in 25 Weekly Reporter, No. 42, and in the Law and Equity Reporter for October 10, 1877, Vol. 4, No. 15, p. 405. :

" Court of Appeals.

" From the Court of Bankruptcy.

" In re Joseph—Ex parte Cooper.

5 " Aug. 2, 1877.

" Appeal from Mr. Registrar Spring—Rice, sitting
" as chief Judge.

" Joseph, a trader, on July 4, filed a liquidation pe" tition, and the next day applied to have Cooper made
" receiver, but the hearing was adjourned for two days.
" On the 5th, some of the creditors, professing to be a " majority in value of those set out in the bankrupt's
" statement of his affairs, signed under R. 262, a paper
" nominating and appointing Cooper receiver, and on " the same day other creditors, also claiming to be a " majority in value, signed another paper naming and " appointing one Barrow receiver. On the adjourned
" day the Registrar, on the application of the second " set of creditors, appointed Barrow receiver, and 6 " Cooper appealed.

" Winslow, Q. C., & Bagley, for appellant.

" F. Knight, (Roxburgh, Q. C., with him), for Bar" row. As a preliminary objection, the appeal cannot " be entertained.

" Winslow, Q. C., and Bagley, contra: As Cooper
" has been appointed receiver, by a majority of " those set out as his creditors by the bankrupt, he " has a right to come to the court for assistance to put " him in possession of the property.

" James, L. J.: The receiver cannot be allowed to " present this appeal. The Registrar said to him, in " effect, 'You need not trouble yourself any more " 'about this matter.' If a creditor had appealed, he " must have been heard; but as the sole interest of the " receiver in the estate is for his percentage, he cannot be permitted to enter into litigation for that. 7

" BAGGALLY & COTTON, L. JJ., concurred.

" Appeal dismissed with costs."

GEORGE N. STEWART, Solicitor and of Counsel for
The Mobile & Ohio R. R. Co.

IN THE

Supreme Court 1

OF THE UNITED STATES.

MORRIS KETCHUM ET AL.,
Appellants,

vs.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN AND
ANDREW FOSTER ELLIOTT, 2
Appellees.

No. 879.
October Term,
1877.

William D. Dunn, William Dickson, and George H. Young, who, as trustees for bondholders secured by a second mortgage made by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, were defendants in certain suits pending in the Circuit Court of the United for the Southern District of Alabama, in one of which Morris Ketchum was complainant, in another of which William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot were complainants, and in another of which D'Orelli Ziegler and others were complainants, answering the amended petition of 3 William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. Haskins Dupuy, Alexander Duncan, William Butler Duncan, and Andrew Foster Elliott for a dismissal of the above-entitled appeal, say:

That the order of March 6, 1876, set forth in said

4 amended petition, was made as therein stated, and that afterwards, by an order made in all of said suits on June 5, 1877, of which a copy is set forth in said amended petition, said order of March 6, 1876, and the proceedings thereunder, were, by consent of all parties, adopted and ratified; and the litigation thereafter proceeded for the common purpose of securing a sale, and of enabling creditors to litigate their respective claims with each other under said order of March 6, 1876.

That it was the intention of said order of March 6, 1876, to enable every party claiming the benefit of either of the mortgages therein mentioned to exhibit
5 his claim on his own behalf before the master, and, on his own behalf, to contest the demand exhibited by any other creditor;

That Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard, Cephise Chuffard, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, Bernard de Watteville, and Morris Ketchum, did not, nor did any or either of them, make any objection before the master to any claim exhibited by Alexander Duncan before the master, nor did Charles Moran nor Moran Brothers make any such objection; nor did either of said parties take any exception to the report of the master;

That said Alexander Duncan proved a claim before the master as a bondholder to the principal amount 6 of $75,000, to which no objection was made by any party;

That said Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy proved claims before the master as first mortgage bondholders to the amount of several millions of dollars, to which no objection was made by any party, and said master in his report stated that said Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy were such bondholders, and in that respect no exception was taken to such report;

That said Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy were not admitted as defendants in said suit in which said Duncan and Elliott were plaintiffs, but were, by an order which is set forth in full in said amended petition, admitted into said suit to prosecute the claims which had been 7 proved before the master by said Alexander Duncan;

That the only parties who availed themselves of said order of March 6, 1876, to object, before the master, to the allowance of the claim filed by Alexander Duncan as the holder of the coupons which matured in 1874 were William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliott, as trustees, and Louis Belloni, Jr., and these respondents;

That these respondents had, in their answer to the Bill of Complaint in said Duncan and Elliott suit, objected to the allowance of said coupons;

That said Belloni excepted to the report of said master in allowing said coupons, and said Hays, Pier- 8 son, and Dupuy, in the name of Alexander Duncan, excepted to said report for that the said master did not award priority to said coupons, but no other party objected to said report upon the subject of said coupons;

That said Belloni has not taken any appeal to this court, nor have these respondents taken such appeal;

That the answer of said Merian, Renevier, Carrard, and Chuffard to the bill of complaint of said Duncan and Elliott is as follows:

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

FIFTH CIRCUIT AND SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA. 9

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN AND
ANDREW FOSTER ELLIOT, Complainants,

vs. — In Equity.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY AND OTHERS,
Defendants.

The answer of Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier. Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, to the bill of 10 complaint filed in the above entitled cause by William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliott.

Come now the said Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, and protesting that the said complainants are not trustees of the first sterling mortgage of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, and that they have no such interest, right or title in said railroad, or in the other property of said company, as in said bill of complaint they have stated and set forth; and further protesting that said Duncan, Iselin and Wilson have not, nor has any holder of any of the said securities, known as Tennessee Substituted bonds, any interest, right or title to, or in, that part of said railroad which is within the State of Tennessee, without waiving or in anywise consenting to the same, and reserving all their rights in relation 11 thereto, and all manner of exception to said bill, nevertheless, for answer to said bill of complaint, or to so much thereof as they are advised it is material for them to make answer unto,

Answering, say:

That they are not (nor is any of them) citizens of, or residents within the United States of America, but they are aliens and foreigners; that the said Merian, Renevier, and Carrard are, and each of them is a citizen and resident of the Republic of Switzerland, and that the said Chuffard is a citizen and resident of the French Republic, and that they are the holders and owners of bonds of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, of the class denominated and described in the said bill of complaint as first mortgage sterling bonds, and which 12 are secured by the mortgage to said Ketchum, Hallett and Palmer, and thereby entitled to all the rights, liens and security by the same provided to the total sum of forty thousand dollars in par value, and they file this their answer, as well in behalf of other holders of like bonds to the amount of over six hundred thousand dollars, as for themselves.

Further answering, these defendants say: That the said Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company had not made default in the payment of the instalments of interest which accrued, matured and fell due upon its said first sterling mortgage bonds, upon the first day of May and November, 1874, respectively, and that it had not refused payment thereof; but, on the contrary, they say that the same were, at and after the said respective 13 dates of their maturity, to wit, May 1st, 1874, and November 1, 1874, fully paid and discharged to the holders thereof, by the said Railroad Company, and the same are not in equity outstanding debts of said company, or in any manner secured by said mortgage.

Further answering, these defendants say: That the said interest which so accrued and matured, on said first days of May and November, 1874, was evidenced by coupons on interest warrants originally attached to bonds from which they were cut or detached by the holders and owners thereof for presentation to and payment by said railroad company, that they are now presented and claimed to be held and owned by William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Dupuy, by transfer from Alexander Duncan, who is claimed to have acquired them when overdue from the 14 firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co., who claimed to have purchased the same from the holders thereof, partly at, but principally after, their maturity.

Further answering, these respondants say: That said Alexander Duncan is, and said Duncan, Sherman & Co. were and are estopped to claim that said interest is unpaid; that the complainants were, at the maturity thereof, both partners of said firm, both directors of said company, whereof said Duncan was President and ex-officio Chairman of its Executive Committee, and said Duncan, Sherman & Co. were, and had long been the financial agents of said company; that said interest was paid with funds and moneys provided by said Duncan, Sherman & Co. in the usual manner to the holders thereof, without any knowledge on their part 15 that the same were not paid, and without any intention of selling the same, at times when said Duncan was in full possession and control of all the income and assets of said company, and the same were pledged by the Board of Directors thereof to the payment of the interest upon said first mortgage bonds, and were placed in the hands ot said Duncan, Sherman & Co., as such financial agents, for that purpose, and were sufficient for that purpose, but were and are claimed by said Duncan, Sherman & Co. to have been by them diverted from such application, and applied to the reduction of the unsecured debt of said company, to themselves and others.

16 And having fully answered, these defendants pray to be hence dismissed.

(Sgd.)

Geo. Hoadley,
E. L. Andrews,
Solicitors for Defendants.

Filed—June 5th, 1877.

(Sgd.)

N. W. Trimble,
Clerk.

That the following is a copy of the answer interposed by the said Hays, Pierson & Dupuy to the bill of complaint of said Morris Ketchum, and their answer interposed to the bill of complaint of said Ziegler and his co-plaintiffs is in the same terms under 17 an altered title:

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT.

Morris Ketchum
vs.
The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company.

18 The joint and several answer of William H. Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Dupuy to the bill of complaint exhibited in this court by Morris Ketchum against the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company and others as defendants.

These defendants allege and aver that they are the holders of bonds issued by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company upon the security of their first mortgage mentioned in the bill of complaint in this cause to the amount of three millions nine hundred thousand dollars and upwards, and of interest arrearage bonds issued on the security of the first mortgage to the amount of $1,192,800, and of sterling interest bonds issued under the security of said first mortgage to the amount of $765,120, and of bonds issued upon the second mortgage of said corporation to the amount 19 of $961,990, and of all the coupons attached to said bonds and now remaining overdue and unpaid, and also of coupons formerly attached to said bonds, and which matured in the year 1874, to the amount of $535,000 and upwards, all of which claims they aver and allege are entitled to be paid in the order of their maturity, out of the proceeds of the mortgaged premises mentioned in the bill of complaint in this cause; and they deny all the averments and allegations in said bill of complaint which in any way tend to impeach, impair, weaken, or diminish the claims arising upon the said bonds and coupons; and these defendants accept and adopt the answer made in this cause by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, and the answer made in this cause by William Butler Duncan and Andrew F. Elliot. 20

(Sgd.)

F. N. Bangs,
Sol. for Defts.

That all the matters above stated appear by the transcript of the record filed in this court, but that no assignment of errors on the part of said Ketchum and his co-appellants is attached to said transcript, as required by sec. 997 of the Revised Statutes; that these respondents are not informed of the errors which said appellants intend to assign, but that, as these respondents are advised and believe, it is not competent for the said appellants to assign as error the making of any decree which they prayed for and united in obtaining; 21 that these respondents consented to the consolidation order set forth in the said amended petition because the plaintiffs in said suits respectively claimed to be in pursuit of the common purpose of obtaining a decree of foreclosure and sale, and because each waived all question of the right of the other to have such decree made, and because after such waiver no question remained to be disposed of except the continuing obligation and lien of the said coupons of 1874; and inasmuch as the interests of the second mortgage bondholders will be promoted by a speedy 22 sale, and inasmuch as the decree of sale can be carried into effect without prejudice to the rights of those who object to the coupons of 1874, and greatly to the advantage of those mortgage bondholders whose claims are undisputed, these respondents do not object to the granting of the prayer of the said amended petition in so far as it prays for a dismissal of the appeal from such parts of said decree as order a sale of the mortgaged property, and as authorizes bonds to be received in payment.

Wm. G. Jones,
Solicitor for Wm. D. Dunn,
Wm. Dickson and Geo.
23 H. Young, Trustees, &c.,
Appellees.

Approved
Wm G. Jones Sol'r
in Cir. Ct. for Trustees of 2nd
Mortgage

George N. Stewart
Sol'r for Trustees of the 2d Mortgage of R. R. Co.

879 [illegible]

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER and al.,
Appellants,

VS.

WILLIAM H. HAYS and al.,
Appellees.

Petition and Notice, on Motion to Dismiss Appeal and Vacate Supersedeas.

C. W. BANGS,
Solicitor for Appellees.

Oct 20 1877

~~Denied~~

Denied

NEW YORK.
Evening Post Steam Presses, 208 Broadway.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States. 1

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM H. HAYS, ET AL.,
Appellees.

To the Honorable the Supreme Court of the United States:

The petition of William H. Hays, William S. Pier- 2 son and T. Haskins Du Puy, respectfully shows as follows:

In or about 1853, the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, a body politic and corporate, duly created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Alabama, and operating also under and by virtue of the laws of the respective States of Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky, executed a mortgage upon its property and estate to Morris Ketchum, William R. Hallett and John J. Palmer, to secure the payment of an indebtedness incurred by the said company, evidenced by bonds issued by said company for the principal sum 3 of six million dollars, and interest thereon, which bonds bore interest, payable semi-annually, evidenced by coupons attached to said bonds respectively.

Default was made by the said company in the payment of the interest coupons attached to said bonds prior to the year 1870, and thereupon said coupons

4 were funded, and new bonds were issued therefor, secured by the said first mortgage, such new bonds being known partly as sterling-interest bonds and partly as dollar-interest bonds. In the year 1875, William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, claiming to have become trustees under said mortgage in the place and stead of the original trustees named therein, commenced an action in the Circuit Court of the United States for the southern district of Alabama, to enforce the payment of the indebtedness secured by said mortgage, by a sale of the mortgaged property, and they were by said court appointed to be receivers of said property pending said suit, and took possession of the 5 property purporting to be covered by said mortgage. The said William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, by direction of the parties interested therein, claimed that said company had made default in the payment of all the interest which accrued upon said bonds within the year 1874. In said suit such proceedings were had that afterwards, and on or about the sixth day of March, 1876, an order was made by said court in the words and figures following:

IN THE

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA,

6 FIFTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT OF THE UNITED STATES.

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN, A. FOSTER Elliot vs. MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, Wm. D. Dunn, George H. Young and others.	No. 90.

AT CHAMBERS, 6th March, 1876.

This cause has been submitted to the court on the bill, answers, exhibits, replication, and the orders and proceeding in the suit, and a motion has been made 7

by the plaintiffs for the appointment of a master and a reference to him of the pleadings and proofs, to make the necessary inquiries and reports, to prepare the cause for a hearing.

And after an examination of the matters submitted, and a consideration of the motion, the court orders: That James Gillette be appointed special master for this cause, and is directed to examine the mortgage or deed of trust attached to the bill as an exhibit, and to ascertain and report the railroads, branch railroads, estates, rights, property, movable and immovable, included in the terms and conditions of the same, and which have come to the possession and control of the trustees, and are subject to the decree of the court in this suit.

2. The court orders that the said master report the 8
mortgages, deeds of trust, agreements, judgments or other instruments which create a charge, lien or incumbrance on the said mortgaged property, with the order and priority of each of them, in imposing a charge upon the said property, and entitled to payment from the same.

3. The court orders the said master to report the bonds which are secured by the respective mortgages or deeds of trust, or incumbrances, and the amount thereof, and of the interest due thereon, and which form a (present or future) valid claim upon the said corporation; and if the debt exist in any other form than of bonds, then that he report the debt which may be due, or may become due, on the said several securities of the said corporation. Also the master will report the names of the holders of the securities 9
of the company which may be presented and proved to him, and the sum due to each holder.

4. In taking proofs of the debt the master may receive the original bonds, coupons or agreements of the corporation as evidence.

He may allow to be filed with him sworn copies of the bonds, coupons or other forms of debt charging the property, to be taken before any commissioner of the courts of the United States, or other officer authorized by the laws of the United States to administer oaths and to certify depositions with affidavit of their ownership and authenticity. It shall be lawful for the master to designate, in the cities of New York, London, Amsterdam, or elsewhere if needed or be found

10 expedient, commissioners of the Circuit Courts of the United States, or consuls or vice-consuls of the United States, to advertise for the proof of bonds and coupons, and to take proofs of the debts according to the forms of the proofs taken of claims in bankruptcy, and to prescribe a mode for the identification of the bonds so presented and proved to the said officers. And the said master may appoint persons in other cities to take such proof, if in his judgment it may be necessary or expedient. He may also examine the books of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company and its officers, so as to ascertain with exactness the debt due by the corporation which is secured by mortgage or which create liens on the property of the corporation embraced in the mortgage of the plaintiffs.

5. The court orders that if the trustees in the deed
11 of trust of said corporation, dated the 1st day of July, 1871, to wit: William Butler Duncan, Adrian Iselin, and Richard T. Wilson should elect to do so, to allow them to file, within sixty days after the date of the filing of this order, a petition to become plaintiffs in this bill, and to set up therein their claims as trustees upon the said mortgaged property, or any portion of the same, upon their consent to abide the order and the decree of this court; and in the event of their election to do so, the master will take proofs of the deed of trust, and shall proceed in reference to the same in the same manner as he is ordered to do in respect to the first mortgage attached to the bill and to the claims under other deeds of trust, mortgage, or other incumbrances before mentioned.

6. The master may advertise in a paper published
12 in Mobile and New York that he is ready to receive the proofs of the debts secured by the mortgages of the company, and shall give notice in the said advertisement of the mode of making proofs, and before whom they can be made, and he shall authorize advertisements to be made in London and Amsterdam of a similar description by the officers to be designated for the purpose by him.

And the trustees of the several mortgages which have been produced to the court, and the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company are required to aid and to assist the master in collecting the proofs needed to making the report of the amount of the debt due on their respective mortgages and deeds of trust, so that he may be able to perform his duty with promptitude 13

and with accuracy in settling a report for the court.

7. The office of the master must be open for the receiving of proofs, in the City of Mobile, three days of every week, and he may receive proofs every judicial day of the week, until the 15th day of October next, on which day the time for taking proof shall be closed, unless the time be prolonged by a special order from one of the judges of the court.

8. The master may, during this period, make separate reports to the court of the matters submitted and hereinafter described, which may be filed in the office of the clerk of the court for examination and for exceptions.

But no report in reference to the debt so filed shall be confirmed until after the 15th day of October next, and unless it shall have been filed thirty days in the 14
clerk's office.

9. Exceptions to the reports may be filed by the parties to the bill, but should any creditor who shall prove his claim be desirous to contest any other claim proved, and the trustees representing the claim of such creditor shall neglect or refuse to make the exception proposed by the creditor, upon proof that he has made the request of the trustee, and the neglect or refusal by him, the master shall allow of the exception or contestation, and shall report upon it as if made by the trustee.

10. The master shall make up his entire report or reports, under this order, on or before the first Monday of December next, and shall file the same on or before that day, and the usual time for examination and exception shall be given after the date of the filing 15 of the report. He may, before making his report, call the parties before him, to consider of the draft of the report and hear argument of counsel thereon, and the proofs shall be open to inspection.

His report shall embrace the best mode of disposing of the property, in case of sale shall be deemed necessary or proper, and his opinion of the present and prospective value, and he may report the price at which a foreclosure without sale, may be best accomplished in the interest of all parties.

11. The master is at liberty to consider of a plan for the reorganization of the corporation should the creditors of the same agree thereto. Any plan for that purpose presented by three-fourths of the credit-

16 ors owning the different classes of debt, and supported by a corresponding portion of the holders of stock, he may report, with his opinion thereon. He shall take care to ascertain whether the plan proposed be assented to by the parties interested, to the extent aforesaid, before he accepts it for any purpose.

12. The master will make a separate report of the allowances to be made to the trustees for their services and as compensation, and the allowances for the charges, expenses, costs and other forms of claim which are set forth in the deed of trust, or which have arisen in the course of the cause.

March 6, 1876.

W. B. Woods.
Judge.

17 Under the order above set forth the owners of the original issue of bonds and coupons put in circulation upon the security of said mortgage to the aggregate amount of four million nine hundred and ninety-two thousand four hundred and fifty-seven dollars ($4,992,457) in gold, and of sterling interest bonds and coupons to the aggregate amount of $820,858, gold, and of funded dollar interest bonds and coupons to the aggregate amount of $1,284,800 in currency of the United States proved their claims before the special master appointed by the said order.

In the year 1871, the said railroad company executed a trust deed upon so much of its property as was situate in the State of Tennessee, in order to declare, 18 acknowledge, continue and protect in favor of an issue of bonds made by the said company, a lien upon the property of the said company situate within the State of Tennessee, prior and paramount to the lien of said mortgage of 1853, the bonds so issued amounting, in the aggregate, with the unpaid coupons thereon, to the sum of two million fifty-three thousand three hundred and eight dollars ($2,053,308), and said bonds last mentioned became current, and are known as the Tennessee substitution bonds.

Your petitioners have become and now are the owners of bonds originally issued under said mortgage of 1853, and of coupons originally attached to such 19

bonds, to the aggregate amount of $5,938,329.65, and of funded sterling interest bonds and coupons issued upon the security of said mortgage of 1853 to the aggregate amount of $918,913.92, and of funded dollar interest bonds and coupons issued upon the security of said mortgage of 1853 to the aggregate amount of $1,711,457, and of said Tennessee substitution bonds and of coupons originally attached thereto, to the aggregate amount of $1,954,828; and your petitioners have also become and now are the owners of interest coupons, in addition to those above referred to, detached from bonds of which your petitioners have not become the owners, to the aggregate amount of $80,- 20 540, and the following is a correct statement of the mortgage liens of the said railroad company and of the proportion of the said liens of which your petitioners have become and now are the owners and holders.

(See statement on next page.)

STATEMENT OF THE MORTGAGE LIENS OF THE MOBILE & OHIO R. R. CO.

	OUTSTANDING ISSUE REPORTED BY MASETR.			BONDS, &C., PROVED BEFORE SPECIAL MASTER.			OWNED BY PETITIONERS.			B.
	Bonds.	Coupons thereof due and unpaid.	Total of bonds and coupons.	Bonds.	Coupons.	Total of bonds and coupons.	Bonds.	Coupons.	Total of bonds and coupons.
First Mortgage Bonds. £.	$5,609,000 00	$1,289,941 80	$6,898,941 80	£918,225 00	£187,292 55	$4,902,457 23 Gold.	$4,828,000 00	$1,110,329 65	$5,938,329 65	86%
£. Interest bonds.....	769,920 00	152,444 16	922,364 16	£141,900 00	26,652 00	$820,858 00 Gold.	767,040 00	151,873 92	918,913 92	99%
$ Interest bonds.....	1,518,000 00	365,832 00	1,883,832 00	$1,004,100 00	280,700 00	$1,284,800 00 Currency.	1,379,100 00	332,357 00	1,711,457 00	90%
Detached coupons of 1874, owned by petitioners from bonds not owned by Comp.								80,540 00	80,540 00
Total liens of 1853....	7,896,920 00	1,808,217 96	9,705,137 96				7,974,140 00	1,675,100 57	8,649,240 57
Tennessee substitution bonds..........	1,668,000 00	385,308 00	2,053,808 00	120,000 00	91,805 00	211,805 00 Gold.	1,588,000 00	366,828 00	1,954,828 00	95%
Total of first liens....	9,564,920 00	2,193,525 96	11,758,445 96				8,562,140 00	2,041,928 57	10,604,068 57	90%
Other mortgage liens outstanding........	1,927,707 05	434,696 01	2,362,403 06	1,257,154 68	285,539 88	1,542,694 56	1,532,264 74	260,837 00	1,793,101 24	75%
Totals................	$11,492,627 05	$2,628,221 92	$14,120,849 02	$7,152,811 03	$1,699,204 57	$8,852,015 60	$10,094,404 24	$2,302,765 57	$12,397,170 31	87%

After the commencement and during the pendency of the said suit of the said Duncan & Elliot, and on or about the 14th day of March, 1876, the said Morris Ketchum, claiming to be still a trustee under the said mortgage of 1853, also brought an action in the said Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, on the Equity side of said court, to which action he made the said railroad company, and also the said Duncan & Elliot, parties defendant; and in his said bill the said Morris Ketchum claimed that the said company had not made default in the payment of interest which accrued as aforesaid within the year 1874, but that the said interest had been paid and the claim therefor extinguished; but the said Morris Ketchum also alleged and claimed that the said company had, in the year 1875, made default in the payment of the interest which accrued under the said mortgage of 1853; and the said Morris Ketchum brought his said suit for the apparent or, at least, the avowed purpose of enforcing, by the sale of the mortgaged property, the payment of the indebtedness which he admitted had accrued and remained unpaid under the said mortgage, as well as for the purpose of excluding said coupons of 1874 from all share in the proceeds of said sale and for other purposes. 24 25

Afterwards, and on or about the fifth day of February, 1877, D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard de Watteville, Henry Jump and Masson Chavannes, claiming to be holders of bonds issued and outstanding upon the security of the said mortgage of 1853, claiming also that the said railroad company had not defaulted in the payment of the interest which matured as aforesaid within the year 1874, and claiming that there was doubt upon the question who was the trustee, or who were the trustees, entitled to act in enforcing said mortgage of 1853, filed their bill of complaint in the said Circuit Court against the said railroad company, the mortgagor, and against the said Duncan & Elliot, and against the said Morris Ketchum, asking for a decree 26

27 to enforce the payment of the indebtedness which they admitted had accrued under the said mortgage, by a sale of the mortgaged property, excluding said coupons of 1874; but your petitioners say that, before the filing of the said bill of the said Ziegler and his co-complainants, the said Ziegler and his co-complainants had, in the name of Charles Moran or Moran Brothers, put in proof before the master appointed by the said order of March 6, 1876, in the suit in which said Duncan & Elliot were complainants, whatever bonds were held by them, the said Ziegler and his co-complainants, and so had become parties to said suit; and Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard
28 and Cephise Chuffard had also, in the name of said Charles Moran, or of Moran Brothers, proved certain first mortgage bonds and coupons held by them, before said master.

Your petitioners further show that the said suit in which Duncan & Elliot were complainants, was ready for final hearing at a stated term of the said Circuit Court, appointed to be held at the City of Mobile on the first Monday of June, 1877, and thereupon counsel for the said Duncan & Elliot, and for said railroad company, and for said Alexander Duncan, and for your petitioners, and for said Ziegler and his co-complainants, and for said Morris Ketchum, respectively, appeared, and certain orders were made by the 29 said court, of which the following are copies:

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

W. B. DUNCAN, A. F. ELLIOT, AS TRUSTEES, &c.,

vs

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD Company, Rodolph Merian, et al.

And now come Rodolph Merian, Eugene Renevier,

Charles Carrard and Cephese Chuffard and move in 30 open court that they may be admitted as parties defendant to the bill herein, with leave to file an answer thereto with all the rights of parties to said bill.

After hearing counsel, and the court being duly advised:

It is ordered that the said Rodolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephese Chuffard be, and they are hereby, admitted as parties defendant to this suit, and that they have leave to file an answer to the bill herein, and they have and exercise all the rights and privileges of parties to the record herein.

Joseph P. Bradley,
C. Justice.
W. B. Woods,
Circuit Judge.

Filed June 5th, 1877. 31
N. W. Trimble,
Clerk.

At a Stated Term of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, held at the Court House in the City of Mobile on the 5th day of June, 1877.

Present—Hon. Jos. P. Bradley,
Circuit Justice, &c.
" W. B. Woods,
Circuit Judge.

Wm. B. Duncan and Andrew F. Elliot 32
vs.
The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, et al.

The parties appearing in open court, by their respective solicitors and counsel, and consenting to this order, on motion of Mr. F. N. Bangs, solicitor, and of counsel for Wm. H. Hays, Wm. S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, claiming to be the assignees and owners of the claims of Alexander Duncan exhibited before the master in this cause under an order made March 6th, 1876, it is ordered:

33 That said Wm. H. Hays, Wm. S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy be, and they are hereby, admitted to prosecute the claims of the said Alexander Duncan in this Court, and, if so advised, by appeal, review and otherwise as they may be advised, in the same manner, and with the like effect, and to the same end and intent, with which the said Alexander Duncan can prosecute the same, or could have prosecuted the same if he had continued to be the holder of such claims.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
C. Justice.
W. B. WOODS,
Circuit Judge.

Filed June 5th, 1877.
N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

34 Your petitioners further show that at the same time orders were made by the court, by consent of the parties concerned, admitting your petitioners to be defendants in said Ketchum suit and in said Ziegler suit, of one of which orders the following is a copy:

At a Stated Term of the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Southern District of Alabama, held at the Court Room, in the City of Mobile, on the 5th day of June, A. D. 1877.

Present—Hon. Jos. P. BRADLEY, Circuit Justice, &c.
" W. B. WOODS, Circuit Judge, &c.

35 MORRIS KETCHUM
vs.
THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD AND OTHERS.

The parties appearing in court, by their respective Solicitors and counsel, and consenting to this order; it is ordered,

That Wm. H. Hays, Wm. S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, be, and they are hereby, admitted to intervene for their own interest, as defendants, in this suit, in the same manner and with the like effect as if 36 they had been named as defendants in the bill, and had been brought into court by a subpœna, with leave to file the answer herewith submitted to the court by them, and this day filed.

Joseph P. Bradley, C. J.
W. B. Woods, C. J.

Filed June 5th, 1877.
N. W. Trimble,
Clerk.

And at the same time the following order was made in all of the said suits:

At a stated term of the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Southern District of Alabama, held at the Court House in 37
the City of Mobile, on the 5th day of June, 1877.

Present,—Hon. Jos. P. Bradley, Circuit Justice, &c.
" W. B. Woods, Circuit Judge.

Wm. B. Duncan and Andrew F. Elliot, Trustees, &c.,

vs.

The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company et al.

Morris Ketchum 38

vs

The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company et al.

D'Orelli Ziegler et al.

vs.

The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company et al.

The parties in these several causes appearing in 39 open court by their respective solicitors and counsel, and consenting to this order,

And it appearing to the court that the above entitled suits are instituted for the common purpose of securing a sale of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad and other property of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, under the first mortgage thereof, and disputes having arisen as to the legal title of and in said first mortgage, which might embarrass the sale of the mortgaged premises, and it appearing to the court that all the parties claiming said legal title are before the court, and likewise the cestuis que trust of said first mortgage, and that a full and perfect title to said railroad and other mortgage property may be obtained under decrees in all of said suits combined.

It is therefore ordered that the above causes be consolidated, 40 and proceed concurrently before this court to final decree.

And it is further ordered that all the proofs taken, orders made, and proceedings had in the cause first above entitled may be read upon the hearing of the causes so consolidated in the same manner and with the same effect as if taken, made and had in all of said causes, and that the evidence taken before the master in said first mentioned cause be read and used as evidence on the final hearing of said causes; and that said causes be set down for final hearing on the pleadings, proofs, orders and proceedings forthwith.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY.
Circuit Justice.
W. B. WOODS,
Circuit Judge.

41 June 5th, 1877.

The above order is made without prejudice to and saving the rights of Wm. B. Duncan, Richard T. Wilson and Adrian Iselin, as trustees for the Tennessee substitution bondholders (so-called), who have not consented to this order; and the cause is to proceed to decree without them.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
Circuit Justice.
W. B. WOODS,
Circuit Judge.

Filed—June 5th, 1877.

N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

Your petitioners further show that in the said suit 42 of Duncan & Elliot, Alexander Duncan had filed proofs before the said master, which were returned to the court by the said master with his report, whereby the said Alexander Duncan claimed to be the holder of coupons originally attached to the bonds issued under the said mortgage of 1853, such coupons being alleged by said Alexander Duncan to remain due and unpaid, and amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $535,000 and upwards, exclusive of interest; and said
Alexander Duncan produced said coupons before said master; and after making such proof before the said master the said Alexander Duncan transferred and delivered his said coupons to your petitioners, and your 43 petitioners were at the time of the making of the said orders the holders of the said coupons, and were heard by counsel upon the hearing of the said cause and in the making of the said orders. Immediately upon the making of the said orders the said causes and consolidated cause were and was brought on to a final hearing, and your petitioners were heard by counsel as aforesaid, and claimed not only that the said coupons of 1874 still continued to constitute a part of the indebtedness secured by the said mortgage of 1853, but also claimed that the said coupons were entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the sale of the said mortgaged premises, and the said Ketchum and the said Ziegler, and his co-complainants, and also 44
Cephise Chuffard, Rodolph Merian, Eugene Renevier and Charles Carrard, who had been admitted as defendants in the said suit of Duncan & Elliott, contended that said coupons were not only not entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property, but had ceased to constitute part of the mortgage indebtedness, and were not entitled to be provided for, to any extent, out of the proceeds of the sale of said property.

45 On the hearing of the said causes there was filed a stipulation as follows:

U. S. CIRCUIT COURT.

WM. BUTLER DUNCAN ET AL.

vs.

THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY AND AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM

46 vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER ET AL.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

The undersigned parties who have proved their claims under the order made by the Circuit Court in 47 the first above entitled cause on March 6th, 1877, namely:

List of the holders of the securities of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company who have transferred, assigned to, and deposited with W. H. Hays, W. S. Pierson and T. Haskins Du Puy, the Committee of Re-organization under the agreement, &c., dated October 1, 1876, the several bonds and securities set opposite their names, respectively.

N. B.—Bonds of £225, £205 and £200 are estimated as $1,000 each. The principal only is included in this statement; the bonds have attached to them the coupons past due from and including the coupons which matured

May 1st, 1875, on the Sterling and Interest Arrearage Bonds.

July 1st, 1875, on the Tennessee Substitution Bonds.

March 1st, 1875, on the Second Mortgage and Convertible Bonds.

In addition thereto all past due and unpaid coupons on the total amount of the above issues. detached therefrom, and which matured May and November, 1874, and July and January, 1875, have been transferred, assigned to, and deposited with the committee.

(Stipulation continued on next page.)

51 50 49

Total Principal Amount Outstanding.	$5,609,000.	$769,920.	$1,518,000.	$1,668,000.	$1,451,207.	$476,000.
ASSIGNOR.	STERLING.	STERLING INTEREST.	ARREARAGE INTEREST.	TENN. SUBT.	SECOND MORTGAGE.	CONVERTIBLE.
Allen, Mrs. A. K.	$2,000		$2,000		$425
Acker, Joel M.			3,000		1,500	$650
Billups, J. M.	32,000		11,600
Duncan, Alexander	75,000
Frankfurter, Bankverein	82,000		1,800	$196,000	28,800
Hayes, Wm. H.	72,000		28,900		132,068	78,000
Plock & Co.	172,000		11,400	40,000	166,100	7,525
Plant H. B., Trustee.	155,000		110,200
Rossiter, A., Trustee			21,200		45,800
Sistare, Geo. K			13,600		4,200	1,175
Utley, David	33,000		79,000		20,000	21,175
Wilson & Co., R. T.	33,000		3,000		41,300
Wilson, R. T.	24,000
Shipman, W. D., Assignee	6,000		1,000		53,300	78,925
Mason, Alfred	5,000		5,900		6,000
Iselin & Co., A.	51,000		17,900	52,000	50,000	30,000
Lombard, Odier & Co.	32,000			1,145,000	5,000
Baldwin, T. B., Trustee	10,000		10,000
Bond, Geo. W.	1,000					750
Birkner, Hy	17,000		8,800
Birkner, J.	8,000				6,000
Bartlett, John E.	23,000	11,040

Chouteau, Chas. P	6,000		3,000		12,025
Cropsey, H. E.	18,000		1,000			625
Crawshay, Robert T.	635,000	260,640
Cartwright, Benj'n.			5,000		5,000
City National Bank, Cairo, Ill.			5,000			25,000
Clarke, Wm. M.					7,000	24,450
Cox, E. A	1,000		8,000
Campbell, Duncan G.	2,000				200
Cromwell, Caroline L.	4,000		2,500
Dorrance, D. G	2,000					1,250
Bixon, Joshua	15,000	4,800
Dudley, J. A.	3,000		3,500			1,250
Dickerman, M. E			3,000			275
Denio, Israel			2,500			250
Deaton, Jas. C.	5,000		2,200
Morgan, J. S.	24,000	13,920
Drexel, Morgan & Co., for J. S. M.			200		3,650
Crisman, Geo.					1,100
Dow, R. K					4,841	8,000
Field, Marg't.	3,000		2,000			1,900
Frazer, Hesse	1,000		4,200
Trabur, Geo. W	10,000		3,000		3,260	2,500
Gallatin National Bank.	31,000		40,000		42,000
Griffith, Jno. R.	2,000		5,700
Gannett, Alfred			11,500		1,000
Garnett, E. S.			5,500
Hunziker & Co.	4,000				7,000	250
Harbeck, Wm. H.	67,000		31,000
Harbeck, Jno. H.	24,000		15,000
Henderson, S. E.	2,000		1,000
Hardy, H. C	11,000		8,000

Assignor.	Sterling.	Sterling Interest.	Arrearage Interest.	Tenn. Subt.	Second Mortgage.	Convertible.
Hamilton, Thomas A.	$4,000		$1,100		$1,200
Hamilton, Mrs. Peter	3,000		2,000
Hamilton, Miss A. H.	1,000		1,000
Hays, Jacob					750	$10,000
Hildreth, D. M					3,100
Hildreth, D. M., Trustee
Hopkins, E. W.	10,000		1,400
Isbell, S A.	3,000		500		2,000
Irwin, L. F.	2,000		400
Jenkins, Mrs. S. M	4,000		1,000
Jenkins, Mrs. S. M., Ex'rx.	92,000		4,000
Kinney, G. W. G	2,000		200		700	500
Kettlewell, Rev. Samuel	9,000		5,500
Krouse, T. J	3,000		1,000
Ketchum, Wm. H.	3,000					250
Littlejohn, James.	5,000		4,000
Lynch, George H.	7,000		3,000
Lay, Mrs. H. C.	11,000		1,000
Lull, Mrs. F. V. A	9,000		3,300
Lake Bros.	2,000		4,000
Levy, Mrs. B E.	3,000		2,000
Levy, Mrs. Sarah.	13,000		4,600
Lyons, Jacob C.	24,000		8,500
Marsh, Hester	18,000 2,000		2,500			1,875
Marsh, Hester, Ex'rx

Mather, F. E.	4,000		2,000
Maynard, Joseph	17,000	19,200
Mason, Jac., Betsey C. & Mary C.	2,000		1,300
Maffit, Julia	6,000		2,500		12,100
Moon, Edward	15,000	4,800
Merrill, D. F.	6,000		4,200		2,000	1,375
Murray, Est. Donald	8,000		5,300
Marié, P.			25,000		5,000
McDearman, J. C.			500		9,950
Murdock, A., Trustee					3,013
Merian, A., in trust					4,100
Morss, D. F.	11,000		18,000
Moore, Mrs. L. D.			5,000
Murdock, Mrs. Grace A.	7,000		4,100		800	125
Nock, Thomas G.	2,000		14,000			900
Oelrichs & Co.	11,000		6,000
Peabody, Est. of Geo.	49,000	18,240
Phelps, S. F.	6,000		3,000		15,000	3,875
Phelps, S. F., Jr.	1,000		1,000		2,000
Phelps, S. F., in trust Mrs. Lyman
Pidgeon, Miss H.	2,000	960
Peterson, Mrs. Janet	9,000		3,900
Prior, Mrs. Sarah	2,000		400
Petrie, C.			1,500
Powers, L. H.			1,500
Phipps, P.					900	700
Phillippe, A.	9,000		2,500
Parker, Mary A.	1,000		500
Reid, C. C.	1,000		1,000
Reynolds, Jno.	6,000
Robinson, Thos.	110,000	15,840

60 59 58

ASSIGNOR.	STERLING.	STERLING INTEREST.	ARREARAGE INTEREST.	TENN. SUBT.	SECOND MORTGAGE.	CONVERTIBLE.
Richardson, L. M.			$5,000		$5,500
Randall, F.			4,000		3,200
Rogers, Thos					2,000
Rosengarten, Geo. D	$12,000		6,500
Soule, L. H.	3,000		2,000
Shepard, S.	51,000		88,100
Sprague, D. J	3,000		3,000
Stutzer, F.					5,250
Stutzer, Herman	15,000				5,000
Stables, James	21,000		13,000
Sims, Wm. H.	2,000				1,000
Smith, Caroline T			3,500
Tevrill, Geo	7,000		4,300
Scott, Mrs. Ann G	3,000		500
Sewall, Mrs. J. W			19,000		1,000
Sherman, Mrs. S. M. G.					4,800
Searles, R. R.					1,000	$1,250
Murdock, A. Trustee	2,000		3,100		200
Tilney & Co., Jno. S.					3,425	2,500
Utley, H. G	13,000		6,300		1,250
Van Dresar, Francis	1,000					875
Van Dresar, Steward	1,000				300	250
Van Dresar, Ezekiel	7,000		7,000			1,250
Van Vranken, M. F.	6,000		3,000
Vedder, Estate of N. F.			5,000		7,516
Von Hoffmann & Co., L.	10,000			2,000	3,300	12,500

	66		65		64
Van Dresar, Ezra					2,500
Wardwell, A. M	10,000		2,000		1,000	3,000
West, M. C	2,000				1,000	500
Westfeldt, Mary E., Executrix	2,000		700
Westfeldt, Mary E	2,000		700
Wardwell Chas H			2,000			625
Wardwell, Samuel			2,000			625
Wardwell, W. W			1,000			1,250
Weiler, Haas & Kraus					691	250
Walker H. H	2,000		4,000		5,000
Wesson, S. L	1,000		1,000
Carter, Jessie	1,000		500
Howland, Mrs. A. W	4,000		1,000
Samuel, John	5,000		400
Holmes, L. W	1,000		3,000			150
Winston, A. A	6,000		400
Martin, G. W					2,200
Bartlett, Levi			3,000
Judd, H			1,100		1,000
Hayes, F. T			500		500
Whitfield, Gaius			7,000			125
Lyall, Chas	3,000	4,800
Citizens' Insurance Company			500		4,082
Crawford A. G			700		1,865
Crawford, J. L			2,400
Crawford, Estate Jane			3,500
Monroe, Hugh	19,000		6,500		3,100
Morrill, D. L	4,000		1,400
Clemens, Chas. H	4,000		1,000
Healey, F. W., Executrix	8,000		5,500
Railway Debenture Trust Co	24,000	48,000

ASSIGNOR.	STERLING.	STERLING INTEREST.	ARREARAGE INTEREST.	TENN. SUBT.	SECOND MORTGAGE.	CONVERTIBLE.
Sheldon, Israel			$8,000
Rossiter, A			900		$4,600
Barton, J. B			14,000
Southwick, A. B			9,500
Hays, M. V. E	$4,000		7,000
Tompkins, Mary C	17,000		5,000		26,000
Brokaw, J. A. K					1,000
Rawson, Hy	51,000
Lampson, Sir C. M	75,000	$184,320
Lampson, by C. H. Clark, Agent		28,800
Lampson & Co., by C. H. Clark, Agent	5,000	62,400
Lampson & Co		11,040
Adrian, Mrs. Eliza	1,000
Anderson, Miss Kate	1,000
Allen, West & Co					1,000
Bisschoffscheim, F. R				50,000
Bisschoffschiem, Fred				25,000
Bingaman Levi					500
Brooks, Leslie E
Bligh, Milton D	6,000					$2,500
Brainard, Mrs. M. J	20,000
Brown, James			6,000
Boynton, Edward C			5,000
Birdseye, J			4,000
Boyd, A. M					1,025
Brown, Wm. Smith					900

Bronson, Henry	1,000
Bartlett, H. E			1,000
Cropsey, James, Trustee	2,000
Cochrane & Co	3,000
4 Cochran Helen	1,000
Calvert, William W. (N.)	1,000
Campbell, Ella C	1,000
Closson & Hays						2,500
Closson & Hays, Attorneys						2,500
Corish, Ellen					400
Drummond, D. G	2,000
Dwight, Mrs. C. S	3,000
Dillaway, George W	4,000
Duncan, W. B. D., in trust	10,000
Day, Addison			$4,000
Donnell, Lawson & Co			1,000
De Rham & Co				1,000
Davis, James M	1,000
Cunliffe, E. G						12,500
Eads, Creswell	6,000
Ellis, A. G						50
Gillespie, A. J						1,250
Gamble, Miss Mary	5,000
Goodwin, Mrs. Caroline	6,000
Gage, A. S			1,000
Gurlick, Alexander	1,000
Havens, E. B	5,000
Hale, W. B., Ex-President	4,000
Harris, Mrs. Mary	5,000
Hunt, Jacob			1,000
Howe, W. E			500

Assignor.	Sterling.	Sterling Interest.	Arrearage Interest.	Tenn. Subt.	Second Mortgage.	Convertible.
Horton, T. S.						$550
Henshaw, Jane			$8,000
Hays, Miss Ella			1,000
Hays, E. St. John					$100
Hays, William H. and Jacob						5,000
Huntington R. H.						875
Hildreth. D. M. Trustee	$5,000
Judkins, Charles H. E.	8,000
Irwin, Mary E.	1,000
Jansen, Gersh					7,000
Jacob, Angel H.	15,000
Kerr, J. Hutcheson	13,000
Keegan Peter	17,000
Keegan, James	4,000
King, W. D.	5,000
Kissam, Isabella C.			2,000
Lemon, Archibald D.	10,000
Lee, Mrs. S. L	1,000
Lucas, Sarah A.			600
Lombard, Rev. J. K.					1,000
Mitchell, C. Le Roy			1,000
Marsh, Hester, executrix						1,875
Moulton, Stephen	5,000
Marie, P. & Jno. Steward, trustees	11,000
Meeker, Benjamin	5,000
Milford, Henry	7,000

Murray, May E.	2,000
Maxwell, Dr. P. J.	4,000
Merritt, James B.			200
Waring, Moses			1,000
Mack, Jacob W				3,000
Mason [illegible]. W				2,000
Marshall, Mrs. Ann.					2,000
Murdock, William, executor					1,675
Mobile Savings Bank					4,000
McChesney, E. M.						775
Merrill, Elizabeth J						250
Mauran, P. B.	3,000
Marmaduke, Leslie	22,000
Merwin, S. J, M.
Marshall, O. H.	17,000
Nicholson, William			2,000
Noble, Mrs. L. S.			500
Ogden, Hannah M.					600
Overall, G. Y.	1,000
Oliver, Elijah					200
Oothout William	10,000
O'Conor, Charles	15,000
Orr, James	7,000
Powell, Alfred H., guardian	1,000
Perry, Mary H.	2,000
Pfizer & Co., Charles	10,000
Ravenstedt & Co., Charles	5,000
Parnell, Delia T. S.			3,000
Pearl E. G.					100
Phillipe, A., executor,						600
Russell, W. T.	1,000

78 77 76

79

80

81

Assignor.	Sterling.	Sterling Interest.	Arrearage Interest.	Tenn. Subt.	Second Mortgage.	Convertible.
Rowland, Alice J	$1,000
Rogers, P. V	2,000
Robinson, Joseph	4,000
Raymer, Henrietta			$1,000
Roberts, E. M			3,000			$550
Reynolds, Mary E
Richmond, Benjamin	1,000
Forster, J. B. & D. Benson, trustees	7,000
Whitehead, James,	5,000
Sotolongo, M. E. de	2,000
Simpson, A			1,000
Somarindyke, A			10,000
Spencer, H. D			3,000
Searles, Jas. H						750
Smith, Saml., S. T						1,250
Smith, Chas S						1,250
Saunders, C. A	20,000
Sykes, A. J	1,000
Smith, E. R	1,000
Stein, Lewis	10,000
Stoutz Bros
Schunemann, Geo. F	1,000					250
Shepherd, Geo. W	7,000
Thomas, Geo
Torry, Mrs. Lucy			2,000
Terry, Curtis B			1,000			250

Utley, Squire	5,000
Utley & Wardell
Wait, N. E.			1,000
Williams, W. T.						625
White, Elizabeth H.			1,000
White, H. L. & Jas. Brown			2,000
Ware, Eliza			2,000
Wood, Jas D.					800
Williams, Jas. F.						2,500
Wetmore, Geo. Peabody						250
Willett, E. D.	3,000					6,250
Walker, Chas.	2,000
Winder, J. E.	2,000
Winthrop, Jno.
Quilter, Wm.	5,000		2,000
Herrick, J. H.	1,000
Herrick, J. H., trustee	1,000
Hall, David F.	5,000
King's Sons, Jas. G.	10,000
Shipman, W. D., assignee, W. W. S.
Scears, Jno.	10,000				300
Cookson, Joseph	8,000
Clegg, Francis	3,000
Coleman, Wiley	10,000
Crawford, Andrew	2,000
Crawford, Mrs. G. B.
Jones, Eliza	1,000				1,012
Hicks, Wm.
Kellogg, Mary B.			3,000
Bienville Lodge No. 348			500
Garnett, Wm. A.					310	775

84 83 82

Assignor.	Sterling.	Sterling Interest.	Arrearage Interest.	Tenn. Subt.	Second Mortgage.	Convertible.
McMillan, Thos.						$275
Perryman, E. S.						350
Bromberg, F.						250
Crawford, Sallie G.
Crawford, Margaret L.			$7,600
Goodier, John	$6,000		800
Gates, Wm.						500
Solomonson, Ed.	3,000
Lawson, Jno.	1,000
Lever, Jas.	3,000
Roberts, Everett						225
Payne, Wm. H.	1,000
Whitaker, Robt.	2,000
Bradshaw, Jonas J.	1,000
Hoyle, Wm., executor	8,000
Fry, Anna S.	1,000
Morton, Thos. H.						300
Morrison, Chas.
Pease, E. R.	5,000	72,000
Bickham, Wm.	5,000
Scott, Gertrude
Stein, Robt.			600		1,800
Phelps, S. F., in Trust			3,000
Phelps, S. F., in Trust, Mrs. Lyman			5,000
Cooper, Adele S.			5,600
Thomas F. H.						625

Green, Lewis, Sr.						100
Bonner & Co., G. T.	24,000					39,275
Bonner & Co., Geo. T.						2,500
Bonner & Co., G. W. S.					300
Bonner & Co., Geraldine M.					100
Bonner & Co., G. T., Trustee, M. J. Boys					1,500
Boyd, Mary J.			600		2,700
Le Clerc, L., by W. B. D., in Trust			1,000
Iselin & Co., for Banque Commerciale	3,000			4,000	20,400	3,625
" Lombard O. & Co.	90,000			7,000
" Asso. Financiere	50,000
" Evesque & Co.					10,000
" P. au Thalhof				1,000	1,000
" Victor, Jacob, Executor	12,000		500
" A. B. Huessler	6,000
" P. Massa	9,000
" M. Handschein	1,000			1,000
" E. Saladin				8,000
" A. Rusch	3,000		12,500
" A. Richard			33,300
" Robt. Ernst				5,000
" Mrs. A. Iselin				6,000
" Rod. M.				1,000
" Bory & Holland	10,000
" B. La Roche	1,000			[illegible],000	5,000
" Heirs, Sig. Marcel	2,000
Kennedy & Co., J. S.	219,000
Delafield, L. L., Trustee	11,000
Cutting & Co., R. L., Jr.						12,500
Campbell, Patrick	8,000
Darling, A. B.	6,000		1,500
	90		89			88

Assignor.	Sterling.	Sterling Interest.	Arrearage Interest.	Tenn. Subt.	Second Mortgage.	Convertible.
Evans, Mrs. Jno. W	$1,000		$1,000
Allen, West & Co.			1,000
Burt, A. P.	11,000
Berry, W. W	12,000
Barry, Mrs. A. R.			1,000
Baldwin, J. G.	2,000
Bestor, Daniel P.	5,000
Brown, John	10,000
Belmont, August	5,000
Brown, James M., Treasurer	1,000
Brown, W. H.	2,000		4,200
Bowen, John	5,000
Billington, John					200
Brown, N. H.	6,000
Carrigan, James	6,000
Chears, C. W					100
Clarke, J. F.	1,000
Clarke, Freeman	9,000		500		2,200
Curtis, Judson	1,000
Camack, James	6,000		1,100
English, J. G.	1,000		500
Elliott, George A.			600
Eldridge, Oliver					800
Gibson, Antoinette J.	17,000
Holt, Mrs. J. A.	3,000
Hoard, C. B.	5,000

5

Harbeck, John H., Jr.	8,000
Hall, Joshua G., Administrator	1,000
Hays, W. H., for J. B. C. & Co.						5,000
Heineman, Mrs. Mildred F.	20,000
Hazard, Jas. B., Trustee	2,000		800		200
Hopkins, E. M.						2,500
Humphries, W. D			14,500
Jacquiemyus, G. Robin				6,000
Knox, J. C	20,000		9,500		10,000	5,000
Lussier, Miss Appoline	4,000
McClellan, Geo. B.	10,000
March, P. S.	30,000
McKay, C. F.	2,000		4,300
Mott, W. F.	1,000
Muldon, Miss Ellen	4,000		1,000			2,375
Muldon, Miss Rebecca A.	4,000				1,300	2,375
McNeil, Danl., Executor						25
Murdock, A., by Peoples' Savings Bank	1,000		2,200		1,500
Myers, Rutherford & Co.						5,000
Marks, A. B.	5,000		5,000
Marks, Henry,			12,000
Otto, W. T., examiner	10,000
Owen, Miss Eliza	1,000
Pratt, W. H.						200
Quinn, Barney					2,756	550
Reese, Mrs. Margaret	4,000		1,000
Randall, J. K.	1,000		200
Setchwell, Jos.					3,195
Scudder, S. O.	6,000		44,500
Sinclair, T. M.			1,000
Southern Mutual Ins. Co.	10,000		2,900
Schroeder, H. A.	6,000		1,000
Seybert, Henry, by J. C. Knox						10,000
Seguin, Mrs. Anne			6,100

96

95

94

ASSIGNOR.	STERLING.	STERLING INTEREST.	ARREARAGE INTEREST.	TENN. SUBT.	SECOND MORTGAGE.	CONVERTIBLE.
Thorn, Thomas W.			$1,000
Webb, John	$3,000
Whittemore & Co.	1,000
Whitney & Sons					$24,200
Walsh, Miss Kate						$250
Walsh, Miss Fannie M.						250
McKenzie, A.			2,500
A. Iselin & Co., for Ed. Koechlin	4,000
Chas. L. Young	20,000
A. Iselsin & Co.			3,000
W. Greer	3,000
J. & C. Gardner	5,000
D. & W. Carmichael	10,000				2,300
Filsen Carmichael	1,000
D. Carmichael	1,000		200
A. Oakman	7,000
D. Cunningham	6,000
G. Porteous	2,000
J. J. Montgomery	4,000
J. Monroe					10,000
E. Gibben	2,000
F. Greer	6,000
W. Aickin					14,000
J. Lee					10,000
H. Greer					6,000
A. J. A. Lepper	20,000					5,000
Wm. Thompson	7,000
J. S. Hazleton	2,000		8,000
P. Anderson
	$3,931,000	$765,120	$1,192,800	$1,553,000	$961,990	$474,925

do hereby place on file this waiver of their objection 100 to the allowance of the coupons of 1874 as a part of the first mortgage debt, and their consent that such coupons may be paid, with interest, out of the proceeds of sale prior to any other claims secured by said mortgage, and we adopt and approve the acts and doings of Duncan and Elliot as trustees.

Dated Mobile, June 5th, 1877.

F. N. BANGS,
Solicitor and of Counsel for said parties.

Filed June 5th, 1877.

N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

Thereupon, and on or about the 15th day of June, 1877, there was duly entered a decree, in the words 101 and figures following:

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

W. BUTLER DUNCAN AND A. FOSTER ELLIOT
vs.
MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM
vs. 102
MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER ET AL.
vs.
MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY AND OTHERS.

These causes having been consolidated and set down for a hearing at the same time under the order of this court, to be disposed of by the same decree, came on to be heard, upon the pleadings, exhibits, orders, re-

103 ports, exceptions, and the testimony taken in the cause as taken before the master, and were argued by counsel; and thereupon the court, upon consideration of the premises, declares, orders, and decrees—

1. That the reports submitted by the master, under the orders and directions to him, are confirmed, and all the exceptions to the same are overruled.

2. The court declares and decrees the deed of trust described in the bill, executed by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, dated the first of November, 1853, and appointing John J. Palmer, Wm. R. Hallett, and Morris Ketchum, the survivors and successors of them, as trustees, is a valid conveyance of the railroad of the said corporation, and of all the property therein mentioned, for the security of the uniform series of first mortgage bonds, and the interest to accrue thereon 104 therein set forth, and that the said bonds and coupons, including the coupons which became due on the first of May and November, 1874, represented as owned by Alexander Duncan, are secured equally, and to be ratably paid from the proceeds of the property without priority or preference among them.

3. The court declares and decrees there was a default on the part of the corporation aforesaid in the payment of the installments of interest promised to be paid in May, 1874, also in November, 1874, and successively in May and November since that date, and that a title accrued to the trustees under the said deed therefrom to enter into possession of the property, and to obtain a decree for the sale of the property therein described, to be enforced unless the said corporation shall pay the debt which has been ascertained to be 105 due on the said deed of trust by the master's report in this cause.

4. The court orders and decrees that the defendants to this cause, to wit: The trustees in the second and the other deeds of mortgage of a date subsequent to that of the mortgage described in the bill as the first mortgage, pay into the registry of this court on or before the first day of August next, the amount of the debt ascertained to be due on the deed of trust by the Master and reported to the court, and in case of any default on their part, that their equity of redemption shall be henceforth barred and foreclosed.

5. The court orders and decrees that the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company be authorized to pay into court the amount ascertained to be due upon the reports of the Master on or before the first day of August next, together with all costs in the matter with all costs in the cause. and in case of a compliance with this order, that further proceedings on this decree shall be suspended. 106

6. In case of a failure to make the payment as provided in this decree at the time appointed therein, to wit, the first day of August next, the court orders James Gillette, the master heretofore appointed in this cause, and Thomas H. Herndon, who is hereby appointed special master for the purpose, to advertise the property described in the said deed of trust of the date of the first day of November, A. D. 1853, as aforesaid, and all property, and franchises, and rights comprehended in its terms, for sale, at public auction, in bulk and as an entirety, for cash, to the highest bidder, on some day to be designated by them in the advertisement of sale. 107 The sale will be made in front of the Custom House, in the City of Mobile, between the hours of noon and three o'clock P. M. They will advertise the sale in a daily paper published in Mobile, and in two daily papers published in the City of New York, for eight weeks prior to the day of sale. They will appoint a crier before the sale whose fee shall not exceed one hundred dollars. The masters will attend the sale in person, and take care that it be fairly and regularly conducted, and with proper regard to the rights of all persons. The master shall exact from any bidder, before making an adjudication to him, a deposit of the sum of fifty thousand dollars in money, to defray the costs, expenses, and charges incident to the trust, and a further deposit of one hundred thousand dollars in money, or of the bonds or coupons described in the 108 said deed of trust and master's report as a part of the debt secured by the said deed, and in case of his refusal, the masters may reject the bid thus made, and proceed with the sale as if the bid had not been made. In case of any failure of a bidder to comply with the terms of sale, and the masters shall find that the bidder will not or cannot comply, they may make a re-sale on the day of the sale at the same place, or they may give notice that on the day following, between the same hours of twelve noon and three P. M. they will make a sale also at the same place under the decrees according to its conditions; and they shall have power to adjourn the sale for thirty days, to be made at the same place, by adding a note to the advertisements for 109 that purpose, should they deem that course advisable, and by causing publication of said advertisements to be continued in the same papers until the day of sale.

7. The court orders and decrees that the masters may receive in payment from the highest and last bidder, bonds and coupons which form a part of the first mortgage debt ascertained to be due or owing by the master in his report, and sustained by the opinion of this court; provided, however, that a sum sufficient to pay the costs, charges, and expenses of the trust as above mentioned, whether exceeding the said cash deposit or not, and also to provide for the payment of the pro rata dividend which shall be due or owing to the owners of other bonds and coupons, secured under the deed of trust, must be paid in money, and provided also that if the said mortgage property shall be bid off
110 directly or indirectly by, for, or in behalf of the bondholders and creditors who have, or shall have, entered into and subscribed the agreement for the re-adjustment of the securities of said company, dated October 1, 1876, commonly called the agreement of re-organization, then and in that case all and every bondholder and creditor of said company not having already entered into and subscribed said agreement, who shall, on or before the first day of September next, enter into and subscribe the same and deposit their securities with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in the City of New York, or with the Bank of Mobile in the City of Mobile, as provided by said agreement, shall be, and they are hereby allowed to participate in said bid and purchase on the same terms and on an equal footing in all respects, according to the character of 111 their claims respectively, with the said bondholders and creditors who have heretofore entered into and signed said agreement.

8. The court orders and decrees that the masters shall make their report of the sale and proceedings connected with the same, and of the performance of the contract by the purchaser, and shall report a draft of a deed of sale under this decree, to be executed by themselves, and shall file the same with the report and their signature thereto, all of which shall be subject to the final order of confirmation. The masters, in addition to the deed to be executed by them, shall prepare a deed of confirmation of the sale and of the conveyance executed by them, and a release of all claim on the property as trustees, or otherwise, with certificates of acknowledgment, fitting it for registration in the

States of Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Kentucky, which deed of confirmation and release shall be executed and acknowledged by William B. Duncan, A. Foster Elliot, and Morris Ketchum, as well as by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, within thirty days from the day of sale, and be reported to the court for confirmation. 112

9. The court orders and decrees, that it appearing to the court that there is a clause in the deed of trust or mortgage described in the bill, saving and reserving the rights and liens that may attach to the roadway and construction thereon, in favor of the State of Tennessee, which will exist and attach as a prior lien by statute of that State, in the event of said State aiding in the construction of the railroad of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company of that State, being a distance of one hundred and eighteen (118) miles; and it appearing that there was such aid, and a claim for a prior lien under the statutes in Tennessee is the subject of controversy in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee and the parties asserting such prior liens are not before this court, and this claim cannot be settled here: The court orders that the sale to be made under the orders of this decree be subject to the rights and liens which exist, if any, under the statutes of the State of Tennessee, in favor of the State of Tennessee, or its grantees or assigns, or the parties asserting such prior liens, in so far as the railroad and property affected by that lien are concerned. 113

10. The court further orders and decrees, that the sale of the Gainesville Branch Road shall be without prejudice to a prior mortgage existing on that branch railroad, as represented in the Report of the Master upon that subject, in the reference to him, in favor of William D. Dunn, John Reid, Jr., Robert C. Crawford, trustees. 114

11. The court orders and decrees, that all the equities among the parties to the suit, all questions of costs and for allowances, and all other questions not disposed of or specially reserved in the foregoing decree, but properly arising under the same, are continued and reserved until after the sale and report by the Masters after their proceedings thereupon.

June 15th, 1877.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
Circuit Justice.
W. B. WOODS,
Circuit Judge.

115 On the day of the rendering of the said decree, the said Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler, and his co-complainants, namely, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, Bernard de Watteville, and also the said Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard, and Cephise Chuffard, by E. L. Andrews, Esq., their Solicitor and Counsel, applied in open court for the allowance of an appeal from the said decree, and supersedeas thereon, and thereupon on June 16, 1877, an entry was made in the words and figures following in the minutes of the said court, viz:

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

116

W. B. DUNCAN ET AL.
vs.
THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM
vs.
THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER ET AL.
117 vs.
THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY ET AL.

In the above cases consolidated, the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States heretofore prayed is hereby granted and allowed.

The supersedeas bond is hereby fixed at one hundred thousand dollars, with sureties resident in the City of New York, who may unite in said bond in any proportionate sums. The said bond shall stay execution if approved and filed at any time within sixty days.

Filed June 16th, 1877.

N. W. TRIMBLE,
Clerk.

And the following is a copy of the opinion of the 118
court upon the said application for a superseadeas:

Bradley, J.—"An appeal being granted and allowed in these cases from the decree rendered therein on the 15th day of June, 1877, the question is raised as to the amount of the appeal bond to be given by the appellants, they being the plaintiffs in the second and third suits and defendants in the first.

"The decree appealed from sustained the claim of Alexander Duncan, as holder of certain first mortgage coupons to the amount of over $500,000 to come in pari passu with the first mortgage bondholders, and directs a foreclosure of the first mortgage and a sale of the mortgaged property to pay the bonds secured thereby, and also certain other bonds given for interest, amounting in the aggregate to about ten millions 119 of dollars. Purchasers are by the decree allowed to pay the purchase money in bonds and coupons to the extent of their proportionate interest as bondholders in the whole amount of first mortgage bonds. About four-fifths of the bondholders have agreed to and subscribed a scheme for reorganizing the company and purchasing the road.

"The court has allowed the remaining bondholders until the 1st of September to join in said scheme.

"A portion of the bondholders, holding less than one-tenth of the entire mortgage interest, are dissatisfied with the decree, and promote the appeal.

"The property being in the hands of a receiver, and not producing much, if any, more than the expenses and necessary repairs of the road, the bondholders to whom the property or its proceeds really belongs, will 120 be kept out of possession for two or three years by the intervention of the appeal.

"This delay in obtaining possession of the property or its proceeds we regard as calculated greatly to injure them.

"By having immediate possession they could make the necessary improvements and connections required for making the property much more remunerative, and could manage it much more to their advantage generally than a receiver can do.

"Or, if the property were immediately sold, they would be in possession of the interest of the purchase money, of which they will now be deprived for two or three years by the appeal.

121 "In our judgment, therefore, an appeal bond for one hundred thousand dollars is very moderate in amount.

"The appellants contend that on the principles of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Jerome vs. McCarter, 21 Wall, 17, and of , decided at the last term of said court, a bond for one hundred thousand dollars is greatly in excess of what should be required.

"They insist that, in contemplation of law, possession by a receiver is equally beneficial to those who are interested in the property, as possession by the parties themselves.

"While this may be the case with regard to dead property, or even real estate generally, we think it is not so where the property, like a railroad, is perishable 122 in its character, and has to be managed, worked, repaired, and taken care of, in order to preserve it.

"We think that the owner is a better manager than a trustee or receiver, who is hampered and restrained in his management, and cannot take advantage of all those means and opportunities which the owner could do for rendering the property most profitable and productive.

"On these grounds, we think that the damage sustained by the delay will be much more than the mere costs and expenses of the suit, and that the actual loss and injury to the owner, or in this case, the bondholders, may be taken into consideration by the court in fixing the amount of the bond; and that loss and damage, we think, will not be less than the amount we have required.

123 "The most forcible difficulty which presents itself to our minds is the measure of damages which would be applicable in a suit on the bond.

"Would it be admissible for the plaintiffs to show a loss to the bond-holders by reason of advantages lost for the cause above referred to? Of this there may be a question. But our opinion is, on the whole, that such a damage would be the subject of a recovery.

"If damages are really sustained, there seems no good reason why they should not be recovered."

WOODS, Circuit Judge, concurring.

And afterward, and on or about the fifteenth day of July, 1877, there was filed in the office of the Clerk of said court, at Mobile, aforesaid, a bond, which, with the endorsements thereon, is in the words and figures following: 124

Know all men by these presents, that we, Charles Moran, resident of the City and State of New York, and Henry Amy, Theodore F. Moran, and Isaac R. Cornell, residents of the same place, are severally and respectively held and firmly bound unto William B. Duncan, of the City and State of New York, and Andrew F. Elliot, of the City of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, in the respective sums following, to wit: the said Charles Moran, Henry Amy, Theodore F. Moran, and Isaac R. Cornell, in the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars each, to be paid to the said W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliot, their executors, administrators and successors; for which several payments well and truly to be made, each of them doth hereby 125
bind himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, severally and respectively, by these presents.

Sealed with our seals and dated this third day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven.

Whereas, lately, at a regular term of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for the Southern District of Alabama, held at the City of Mobile, three certain suits brought therein for a common purpose, were, by order of said court, consolidated into a single cause.

And, whereas, in one of said suits William B. Duncan and Andrew F. Elliot, as trustees, are complainants, and Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, are defendants, on behalf of first mortgage bondholders of the Mobile & 126
Ohio Railroad Company; and in another of said suits Morris Ketchum is complainant, as trustee, and W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliot, above named, are defendants; and in another of said suits D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard de Watteville, Masson Chavannes and Henry Jump, are complainants, on behalf of first mortgage bondholders of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, and W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliot are defendants.

And, whereas, a decree was rendered in the said consolidated cause,

And, whereas, an appeal from the said decree to the Supreme Court of the United States was prayed in open court on behalf of Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard de Watteville, Masson Chavannes, 127 Henry Jump, Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, which appeal was granted, and the order granting the same was filed with the Clerk of said Circuit Court, and a citation directed to said W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliot, citing and admonishing them to be and appear at a Supreme Court of the United States to be holden at Washington the second day of October next.

Now, the conditions of the above obligation are such that if the said Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard de Watteville, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard, and Cephise Chuffard shall prosecute the said plea to effect and answer all damages and costs, if they fail to make the said appeal good, then the above obligation to be void, else to remain in full force and virtue.

128 CHAS. MORAN, [SEAL.]
Witness.

Taken and acknowledged before me, as to Chas. Moran, H. Amy, and Theo. F. Moran,

EDWARD L. OWEN,
U. S. Commissioner for the Southern District, New York.

H. AMY & CO. [SEAL.]
ISAAC R. CORNELL. [SEAL.]

Witness,
L. J. MORRISON,
JOS. P. DOCKERAY.

THEO. F. MORAN. [SEAL.]

Witness,
129 CECIL A. MARKS.

I approve the foregoing bond. Washington, July 9th, 1877. Joseph P. Bradley, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, U. S.

And thereupon there was served upon the said Duncan and Elliott a citation in the words and figures following:

The United States of America, Greeting:

You are hereby cited and admonished to be and appear at a Supreme Court of the United States, to be holden at Washington on the second Monday of October next, pursuant to an allowance of appeal filed in the clerk's office of the Circuit Court of the United States, in and for the Southern District of Alabama, wherein Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard de Watte-

vilde, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, Rodolph 130
Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard, are appellants, and you are respondents, to show cause, if any there be, why the said decree rendered against the said appellants as in the said order of allowance is mentioned should not be corrected and why speedy justice should not be done to the parties in that behalf.

Witness the Honorable Joseph P. Bradley of the Supreme Court of the United States, this 9th day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-seven.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY,
Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, U. S.

To
W. B. DUNCAN, 131
A. F. ELLIOT.

But no citation whatever has been served upon your petitioners, and no proceedings have been taken to secure your petitioners against any costs or damages for delay or otherwise upon the said appeal.

Your petitioners show that since the making of the said decree, the said D'Orelli Ziegler has assigned and delivered to your petitioners the bonds and coupons proved by him before the said master, and in respect of which he claimed to be aggrieved by the said decree of June 15, 1877, and your petitioners are now the holders of said bonds, and of the coupons attached thereto, amounting in the aggregate to $18,000 of 132 principal.

The aggregate principal amount of bonds proved in said suits by the said Bernard de Watteville was $100,000, and of those proved by Henry Jump was $19,000, and of those proved by Masson Chavannes was $17,000, and of those proved by said Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard was $40,000.

Your petitioners further show that as they have learned from said Charles Moran, and verily believe, the said Morris Ketchum has been acting in 133 the conduct of said appeal and in the prosecution thereof, so far as he has prosecuted the same, at the request and instigation of the said Charles Moran, one of the sureties on said appeal bond, and said Charles Moran acted as the attorney in fact of said Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump, Chavannes, Merrian, Renevier, Carrard and Chuffard in all the proceedings above referred to; and your petitioners have been informed by said Ketchum and verily believe that said Ketchum has been indemnified by them or by said Moran against any liability for damages or costs, or otherwise, which he, the said Morris Ketchum, may have incurred in the prosecution or defence of any of the said actions, or in the prosecution of the said appeal.

134 Your petitioners further show that of the original first mortgage bonds issued under the said mortgage of 1853 and proved before the master, your petitioners have become and now are the holders of all except the principal sum of $781,000, and of the sterling interest bonds and coupons issued under the security of said mortgage, your petitioners have become and now are the holders of all except $2,880 of principal money in amount, and of the dollar interest bonds issued under the said mortgage and coupons attached thereto, your petitioners have become and now are the holders and owners of all except $138,900 of principal money in amount, and of the Tennessee substitution bonds

135 your petitioners have become and now are the holders and owners of all except $80,000 of principal money in amount.

Your petitioners further show that the only question made on the hearing of the said causes and cause in the said Circuit Court by the said appellants was as to whether or not the said coupons of 1874 still continued to constitute a part of the mortgage indebtedness, and whether or not if they still continued to constitute such part of said indebtedness they were entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of said sale; that your petitioners do not anticipate that in the event of a sale of said property any amount exceeding the sum of four and a half millions of dollars can by any pos- 136 sibility be obtained for the same,—out of which provision must be made for the payment of said Tennessee substitution bonds, which have, by a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee, been adjudged to be a prior lien on so much of the mortgaged property as lies within the State of Tennessee; and your petitioners say that if upon an appeal to this Court this Court shall determine that the said coupons do not constitute a part of the said mortgage indebtedness, then upon the assumption that the said property shall sell for the sum of four and a half millions of dollars, the advantage gained by the said appellants in respect 137 of the bonds held by them, exclusive of those transferred to your petitioners by said D'Orelli Ziegler and others, will not exceed the sum of sixty-five hundred dollars.

In illustration and proof of the little injury which the appellants would sustain in case said mortgaged property should be sold and the proceeds distributed under the said decree of June 15, 1877, and said decree should be afterwards reversed or modified by the rejection of said coupons of 1874, your petitioners show that the total amount of principal and interest reported by the master to be unpaid on said mortgage of 1853, including said coupons of 1874 and coupons up to November 1, 1876, was $9,705,137.56. 138

The amount reported due on said coupons of 1874, exclusive of interest thereon, was $535,106.74.

The amount of the bonds held by said appellants other than said Ziegler, adding past due coupons to November 1, 1876, was not exceeding $204,000.

If the whole property should sell for $9,705,137.56 above the Tennessee lien, it would make no difference to the appellants whether the coupons of 1874 were disallowed and the decree below reversed or not. If the property sells for $4,582,568.00 above the Tennessee lien, and the claim on the coupons of 1874 is sus-

139 tained, as established by the decree of June 15, 1877, there will be divided on said coupons not more than $267,553, which, if said coupons are wholly disallowed by a reversal of said decree, would be divided among bondholders to the amount of $9,705,137, less $535,106.74, the amount of the disallowed coupons of '74, viz., $9,170,031, and would add not quite three per cent. to the dividends on that sum; and three per cent. on the claims held by the appellants would not exceed $6,200. In other words, in case the mortgaged property should be sold for one-half of the amount now adjudged to be due, over the Tennessee lien, and the proceeds of such sale should be distributed under the 140 decree appealed from, and said decree should be afterwards reversed, the damages which would accrue to said appellants as bondholders would not exceed $6,200. The event in which the utmost damage would be sustained by the appellants would be the event of the mortgaged property selling for ninety-four (94) per cent. of the entire first mortgage indebtedness, and the proceeds of such sale being distributed under the decree below, and such decree being afterwards reversed by disallowing said coupons, in which events, the utmost damages which said appellants, as bondholders, would sustain, would not exceed $12,500; and if the claims of said appellants amounted to $1,000,000, instead of $204,000, their utmost damage, in the contingency sup-
141 posed, would not exceed $70,000. The anticipated damage would be diminished in proportion to the diminution of the price obtained on a sale, as well as also by the deduction of the claim on the Tennessee substitution bonds.

Your petitioners further show that Henry Amy, one of the sureties on said appeal bond hereinabove set forth, is a member of the firm of Henry Amy & Company of the City of New York, and that the said Henry Amy & Company proved before said master in the said Duncan & Elliott suit bonds to the principal amount of $104,000, and that on or about the first 142 day of September 1877, the said Henry Amy & Company transferred said bonds and others, to the aggregate amount of $227,000, principal money, to your petitioners, and your petitioners became and now are the owners and holders thereof, and the said Henry Amy & Company have no further interest in the prosecution of the said appeal.

Your petitioners further show that there has been exhibited to them by Mr. Adrian Iselin, of the City of New York, an original letter written to him in the French language by said D'Orelli Ziegler, of which the following is a correct translation:

ZURICH, Sept. 4th, 1877. 143

Referring to-day to the contents of your letter of 29th May, on the subject of the Mobile & Ohio matters, I have reflected well on its contents, and on all those (letters) which you have had the kindness to write me on this subject.

First not willing to have a suit of law in my name, and still less liking to be brought into a controversy with you, I requested our friend Mr. Chas. Moran most positively to abstain in my name from a suit, and to place my bonds in the Hays Du Puy scheme, so as to terminate, so far as I was concerned, this existing litigation.

Mr. Moran replied that an amicable arrangement would be difficult, owing to dissentients who had joined his cause, and who were too numerous to accord any facility in this direction, to which I replied that it 144 would be better to abstain from an appeal in the name of the whole against certain compensations which you will judge equitable to allow to him and other persons who had become sureties, and who had studied the matter and incurred a risk in securing such a high bond.

Even supposing your party carry the day, the opposition will always find some way which, without upsetting your plans, will always cause you embarrassment.

These observations are simply my personal ideas, without any pretension or value, and this letter is merely to inform you that my bonds will henceforth figure in your lists.

PESTALOZZI AU THALHOF.

145 And the name, Pestalozzi au Thalhoff, is the name under which the said D'Orelli Ziegler conducts his business.

Your petitioners further show that on the twentieth day of August, 1877, they delivered to the special master, appointed by said decree of June 14, 1877, a notice as follows:

U. S. CIRCUIT COURT,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

WILLIAM BUTTLER DUNCAN AND Andrew Foster Elliot, Trustees, &c.

146 vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER, ET AL.

vs.

147 THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

Consolidated Causes.

To JAMES GILLETTE and THOMAS H. HERNDON, Esqurs., special masters appointed by the decree of June 15, 1877.

Gentlemen,—We are advised and instructed to inform you that, we do not regard the execution of the said decree, so far as it requires you to make a sale of the mortgaged property, as stayed or superseded by any of the proceedings heretofore taken in the nature of an appeal by Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler and their co-appellants. No bond has been given on that appeal, except a bond to William Butler Duncan & Andrew Foster Elliot, in their individual names, and they are not, as individuals, parties to the litigation. No bond or security of any kind has been given to us, and no citation has been served upon us. As we are advised, the legal effect of the bond given is, at the utmost, to stay only the proceedings of Andrew Foster Elliot & William Butler Duncan as individuals. Under the circumstances we think it is your duty either to proceed to execute the decree, or to apply to the court for its instructions in the premises. 148

Dated New York, August 20, 1877.

Yours respectfully,
William H. Hays,
William S. Pierson, 149
And T. Haskins Dupuy,
By C. W. Bangs,
Their Solicitor.

As your petitioners are informed and believe, the said Masters thereupon applied to his Honor the Circuit Justice for instructions, and afterwards, the said Masters placed upon the files of the said court at Mobile the opinion of the Circuit Justice upon such application as follows :

"The suits were consolidated and treated as one, one decree was made therein, and an appeal taken in open court and the appellant desired to give an appeal bond 150 satisfactory to the court to stay execution. The bond presented was approved for that purpose. If it is defective for want of form I should certainly feel bound under the circumstances to allow the appellants to file another bond. At all events, until the Court orders otherwise, it seems to me that the Masters should not take it upon themselves to decide that the appeal bond is ineffective. Of course, I am willing to hear any application on the subject that can be properly decided at Chambers. But it seems to me that it is hardly necessary for the Masters to go to that trouble. If the parties are dissatisfied with the bond it is rather for them to make application to the Court or a Judge 151 at Chambers to direct the masters to proceed notwithstanding the appeal.

JOSEPH P. BRADLEY."

A true copy,
JAMES GILLETTE,
Master.

Filed Sept. 18, 1877, N. W. Trimble, Clerk.

Your petitioners further say that on or about the fifth day of September, 1877, they caused to be delivered to said Morris Ketchum a written request as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMITTEE OF REORGANIZATION
of the
152 MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY,
No. 11 Pine street,
NEW YORK, 5th Sept., 1877.

To MORRIS KETCHUM, Esq.:

Claiming to be a trustee under the first mortgage or deed of trust of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company.

Dear Sir.—We have to inform you that we are the holders of sterling bonds secured by said mortgage, exceeding in amount the principal sum of $4,788,000, and of interest bonds secured by said mortgage, exceeding in amount the principal sum of $2,146,200, and of detached coupons secured by said mortgage, exceeding in amount the sum of $730,000, and of coupons still attached to the bonds held by us, exceeding in amount of the sum of $985,000. 153

As such holders, we have to request, and do request of you, in whatever capacity you are, or may claim to be, acting, to desist from the further prosecution of an appeal taken by you, or in your name, to the Supreme Court of the United States. from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Southern District of Alabama, on 15th June, 1877, in a suit to foreclose said mortgage, and to discontinue, dismiss and abandon that appeal.

Respectfully yours,
T. HASKINS DUPUY,
of Com. for

W. H. HAYS,
W. S. PIERSON,
T. HASKINS DUPUY, } Committee of Reorganization.

Your petitioners further show that the damage to 154 your petitioners as owners of said bonds and securities, and to the interests represented by your petitioners as such owners, which damage would arise from a stay in the execution of said decree for the period likely to elapse before said appeal can be regularly heard, will largely exceed one hundred thousand dollars; that besides the loss of interest and other losses referred to in the foregoing opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley, the improvement of the property is delayed and embarrassed, connections and trade contracts with other roads and with steamship companies are prevented from being made, and the necessity of acting 155 constantly under the supervision of the court, is productive of great expense and embarrassment, and your petitioners estimate the damage arising from all such causes at not less than $250,000 per annum.

Your petitioners therefore pray the court that the said appeal taken in open court as hereinabove recited, on the 16th day of June, 1877, may be vacated and dismissed as against your petitioners, for want of prosecution, and because the said appeal has not been as against your petitioners perfected by the giving of the security thereon required by law, or in any other manner; and that any supersedeas or stay of execution heretofore granted as against your petitioners may 156 be vacated and set aside, and leave given to your petitioners to prosecute and enforce the said decree, notwithstanding said appeal in open court; or that if this honorable court shall refuse to grant the relief above prayed unqualifiedly, then that such relief may be granted, unless said appellants shall file a new supersedas bond to your petitioners as obligees in a penalty of not less than five hundred thousand dollars, or upon your petitioners filing in this court a bond to be approved by the court, in a penalty of not more than $75,000, securing to the said appellants, other than said Ketchum, the difference between the amount which they would receive out of the proceeds of the 157 said sale, in case the said coupons of 1874 are, on the said appeal, disallowed as a part of the mortgage debt, and the amount which the said appellants shall receive in case the said mortgaged property shall be sold and the proceeds of said sale distributed under the said decree, which security your petitioners are able and willing to give, and hereby tender to the said appellants, if required by the court; or that your petitioners may have such further or other or different relief as the nature of their case may require, and as may be proper in the premises.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

W. H. HAYS,
158 W. S. PIERSON,
T. HASKINS DU PUY,
By C. W. BANGS,
Their Solicitor.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, }
Southern District of New York. } ss.:

William H. Hays and T. Haskins Du Puy, being duly and severally sworn, do depose and say, and each for himself says, that he is one of the petitioners above named; that he has read the foregoing petition, and knows the contents thereof, and that the same is true to his own knowledge, except as to the matters and 159 things therein stated upon information and belief, and as to those matters he believes it to be true.

Sworn to before me this 8th } W. H. Hays day of October 1877. } T. Haskins Du Puy

Joseph Gutman Jr
United States Commissioner
Southern District of New York

(L. S.)

IN THE SUPREME COURT, 160
OF THE UNITED STATES.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER ET AL.,
Appellants,
vs.
WILLIAM H. HAYS ET AL.,
Appellees.

Gentlemen,—There is herewith served upon you a copy of a petition which has been filed in the office of the clerk of this court, and you are notified that at the court room of this court at the Capitol, in the City of Washington, on Monday, November 5th, 1877, at the opening of the court on that day, or as soon thereafter 161 as counsel can be heard, the court will be moved for an order in conformity with the prayer of the said petition to dismiss the appeal therein mentioned, and that on Monday, October 15, 1877, at the Capitol aforesaid, at 12 o'clock at noon, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, the court will be moved for an order vacating the supersedeas unconditionally, or if not unconditionally, then upon the conditions stated in said petition, or in conformity with the prayer of the said petition. And you are also notified that the appellee Alexander Duncan adopts the said petition and joins in the prayer of the same and will join in the said motions. 162

Dated New York, Oct. 8, 1877.

Yours, &c.,
C. W. BANGS,
Solicitor for William H. Hays, William S. Pierson,
T. Haskins Dupuy and Alexander Duncan.

To E. L. ANDREWS, Esq.,
Solr. and of counsel for Morris Ketchum,
Rudolph Merian et al.,
E. H. GRANDIN, Esq.,
Solr. and of counsel for D'Orelli Ziegler
et al.,
P. & T. A. HAMILTON, Esqs.,
Solrs. and of counsel for Duncan & Elliott,
G. N. STEWART, Esq.,
Solr. and of Counsel for M. & O. R. R. Co.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1877.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER et al.,
Appellants,
vs.
DUNCAN & ELLIOT, Trustees, &c.,
Appellees.

Brief on Motion to Vacate Supersedeas.

F. N. BANGS,
Of Counsel for Petitioners.

NEW YORK:
EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 BROADWAY, CORNER FULTON STREET.

1877.

EVENING POST STEAM PRESSES, 208 Broadway, cor. Fulton St., N. Y.

U. S. Supreme Court.

D' ORELLI ZIEGLER ET AL.,
Appellants,

vs.

DUNCAN & ELLIOTT, TTUSTEES,
Appellees.

Brief for Appellees on their motion to vacate Supersedeas.

In June, 1877, there were pending in the U. S. Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama, three suits in equity to obtain relief for holders of bonds and coupons issued by The Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, payment of which was secured by a mortgage made by that company in 1853.

These three suits were begun in succession, one after the other.

The first was begun in 1875, by William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliot, cliaming to be sole trustees under the mortgage of 1853.

The second was begun in 1876, by Morris Ketchum, claiming to be sole trustee under that mortgage.

The third was begun in 1877, by D' Orelli Ziegler, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, and Bernard De Watteville, bondholders secured by the mortgage, who had already proved their claims in the Duncan & Elliott suit.

The three suits had one purpose in common, which was, to have the mortgaged property sold, and the proceeds of the sale applied to the payment of such of the indebtedness as might be found to be unpaid.

In other respects, the objects of the suits were dissimilar and discordant.

Duncan and Elliot claimed that the indebtedness still embraced coupons for interest which matured in 1874 to the amount of upwards of $535,000, and that those coupons still remained unpaid.

Ketchum claimed that the coupons of 1874 had been paid by the railroad company, and that the holders of those coupons were not entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale which he prayed for.

Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump and Chavannes, made the same claim which Ketchum did in respect to the coupons of 1874, but insisted that they were entitled to proceed as bondholders for a decree of foreclosure, because it was a question between Duncan and Elliott, and Ketchum, who was rightful trustee under the mortgage which lay at the bottom of each of the suits.

At the commencement of the litigation, Alexander Duncan was the owner of the coupons in dispute.

He proved them before a master under an order of reference ad computandum made by the court in the Duncan & Elliott suit (fols. 6 to 17) on March 6, 1876, which was before the commencement of either of the other suits.

Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump and Chavannes had also, under the same order, and before commencing their suit, proved the bonds held by them.

Eugene Renevier, Rodolph Merian, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard had also, under the same order, proved the bonds held by them.

Before the causes came to a hearing, Alexander Duncan had transferred his coupons to the present petitioners, Hays, Pierson & Dupuy; and the petitioners are holders of other claims secured by the mortgage of 1853 to the aggregate amount of $8,000,000. The aggregate of paramount and subordinate liens on the property, held by them, is $12,397, 170.31, out of a total of $14,120,849.02 (p. 8).

When the Circuit Court sat at Mobile in June, 1877, measures were taken to reduce the volume of the litigation and simplify its complexity. To this object the court kindly lent its aid, declaring (as is probably within the memory of the learned associate justice of this court who presided) that the contest as to who was trustee was trifling in comparison with the greater interests involved.

The measures taken were as follows:

1. The petitioners were admitted into the Duncan and Eliot suit to prosecute the claims which had been proved by Alexander Duncan.

2. They were allowed to intervene for their own interest, as defendants in the Ziegler suit, so as, among other things to resist the attack which Ziegler and his co-complainants had made on the coupons of 1874.

3. They were allowed to intervene for their own interest, as defendants in the Ketchum suit, so as, among other things to resist the attack which Ketchum had made on the coupons of 1874.

4. An order was made (fols. 38 to 41), consolidating the three suits, and ordering them to proceed to a hearing and decree together, adopting in the last two suits, the proofs and proceedings which had been taken in the first one.

By these various orders, and by the proceedings which had been taken under the order of reference of March 6, 1876, all parties became actors in the litigation, although not altogether concurring in the extent of their claims. Duncan and Elliot and the petitioners claimed affirmative relief in respect to the whole indebtedness, including as a part of it, the coupons of 1874. Ketchum, Ziegler, Chavannes, Jump and DeWatteville, claimed affirmative relief in respect to the whole indebtedness, but endeavored to exclude the coupons of 1874 from being considered as part of that indebtedness. Merian, Renevier, Carrard and Chuffard, by coming in as proponents under the order of March 6, 1876, claimed affirmative relief for the bonds held by them, while, by their answer in the Duncan and Elliot suit, they endeavored to deprive the coupon holders of 1874 of the remedy which the latter were seeking for in respect to those coupons; and the petitioners, by their answers in the Ketchum and Ziegler suits, resisted the attempt of the promoters of those suits, to deprive the petitioners of relief in respect to the coupons in question.

On the hearing, holders of bonds to the principal amount of $5,888,920, which had been issued under the mortgage of 1853, filed a stipulation (fols. 45 to 100), conceding the claims of the coupon holders of 1874.

A decree was made on June 15, 1877 (fols. 101 to 114), by which everybody concerned got something. The coupons of 1874 were adjudged to be a part of the indebtedness to be provided for, but only upon an equal footing with the bonds and coupons which subsequently matured. This was what Duncan & Elliot contended for, although the petitioners had contended that the coupons of 1874 were entitled to priority of payment over subsequently matured claims. So much of the indebtedness as Ketchum, Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump, Chavannes, Merian, Renevier, Carrard & Chuffard sought to have established, (and which Duncan and Elliot and the petitioners admitted to exist) was established, but only upon an equal footing with the coupons of 1874. The decree was, therefore, to a great extent, in favor of the present appellants. As a decree of sale, it was just what they asked for, and what no one disputed their right, if and so far as they were bondholders, or the representatives of bondholders, to have.

On June 16, 1877, Ketchum, Chavannes, Ziegler, De Watteville, Jump, Merian, Renevier, Carrard & Chuffard applied for the allowance of an appeal from the whole decree, and for a supersedeas. By an entry in the minutes (fol. 117) the appeal was allowed, without any security being then exacted or furnished, and an order was made fixing the supersedeas bond at $100,000, and directing that it should operate as a stay, if filed and approved at any time within sixty days. The opinion of the learned court, stating the considerations upon which the amount of the bond was fixed at $100,000, is given at fol. 118.

The next proceedings were taken on July 9th, and it is desired to call the attention of the court particularly to them. They consisted in the giving of a bond, and the issuing of a citation, without any petition of appeal or any further express allowance of an appeal. The bond is at fol. 124. There is a typographical error in the printing of this bond. It purports, as printed (fol. 128), to be signed " H. Amy & Co." It is in fact signed H. Amy, as we concede. The citation is at fol. 129.

In the bond, William B. Duncan & Andrew F. Elliot, who are named only as individuals, and not in any representative capacity, are the sole obligees. The bond (*fol.*126) recites the suits, and that in one of them Duncan & Elliot, as trustees. were complainants, and Merian, Renevier, Carrard & Chuffard were defendants; that in another Ketchum was complainant, and Duncan & Elliot defendants, and that in another Ziegler, De Watteville, Chavannes and Jump were complainants, and Duncan & Elliot defendants.

No reference is made to the fact that the petitioners were in any way parties to the litigation.

The bond then recites the prayer in open court for an appeal, and the order granting it, and the issue of a citation to Duncan and Elliot. The condition of the bond is that Ketchum, Ziegler, De Watteville, Chavannes, Jump, Merian, Renevier, Carrard and Chuffard, shall prosecute the appeal to effect, and answer all damages and costs, if they fail to make the said appeal good, &c.

The citation (fols. 129 to 131) bears even date with the bond. It is addressed to " W. B. Duncan, A. F. Elliot," and to them only, without any affix. It cites and admonishes them (fol. 129) " pursuant to an allowance of an appeal filed in the Clerk's office," &c., "wherein Morris, Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler, Bernard De Watteville, Masson Chavannes, Jump, Rodolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard and Cephise Chuffard are appellants, and you are respondents," &c.

Since the making of the decree, the appellant Ziegler has assigned his bonds, the principal whereof amounts to $18,000, through the firm of Kelly & Alexder, of New York, to the petitioners, Hays, Pierson, and Dupuy (fol. 132), and it appears by a letter from Ziegler, which is among the moving papers (fol. 143), that his name was used in the suit without his authority.

The decree of June 15, 1877, appointed Thomas H. Herndon and James Gillette, Esqs., Special Masters, to execute the decree and distribute the proceeds of sale. The petitioners, upon being advised of supposed infirmities in the proceedings for an appeal and supersedeas, made a written request to the Masters (fol. 147), that they would either execute the decree or apply to the court for instructions. They then applied to the learned Circuit Justice for instructions ; and his opinion as filed (fol. 150), seems to the petitioners to imply, if it does not expressly state, that a supersedeas must be regarded as in force, until the court, upon the application of the parties, shall otherwise declare.

The petitioners, Hays, Pierson and Dupuy; therefore apply to the court to vacate the supersedeas, as against them, either unqualifiedly, or unless the appellants shall comply with such terms as the court may be asked to impose.

It appears by the petition that the interest of the appellants in the matter in controversy does not exceed $204,000; that if their entire interest amounted to $1,000,000 (which is the total amount of claims now outstanding under the mortgage of 1853, not held by the petitioners) the damage which they would sustain from the decree being executed pending the appeal, and then reversed as to the coupons of 1874, would not exceed $70,000; and the damages in the case supposed, to their actual interest, would not exceed $12,500 (fols. 135 to 141).

The petition also shows that the security given by the appellants is inadequate in amount, fol. 154.

THE ARGUMENT relied upon by the petitioners in support of their motion is, briefly, as follows:

I.—While the allowance of an appeal is necessary to get the record into the Appellate Court, a citation is equally necessary to get the appellees there; and as the taking of security is essential to the validity of the citation, and the citation is essential to the validity of the appeal, it is evident that no appeal is valid without security for costs given at the time of taking it.

93 U. S. R., 87, Kitchen vs. Randolph.
94 Id., 112, Dayton vs. Lash.

Hess Dig- 48 49 50

II.—It is true, that an appeal taken in term, in open court, is effectual to bring the opposite parties into the Appellate Court, as a substitute for a citation; but the necessity of giving simultaneous security, for costs at least, is as great in the case of an appeal in open court, as in the case of an appeal out of term. The statute is still imperative, that the justice or judge signing a citation, shall take security, &c.

20 How,
15 W 142

III.—It is not the effect of sec. 1007 of the Revised Statutes, to obviate the necessity of giving security for costs at the time of obtaining an actual citation out of term, or a constructive citation in term. The only effect of sec. 1007 is to extend to sixty days, the time for giving security for damages, in case an appeal has already been or is simultaneously perfected by the furnishing of security for costs. In other words, a justice cannot now, any more than he formerly could, allow an appeal and sign a citation without any security whatever, and then perfect the proceeding at any time within sixty days afterwards by taking security for costs and damages together.

IV.—In the case at bar, the proceedings taken in term in relation to an appeal were inoperative, because no security of any kind was given at the time.

V.—The subsequent proceedings of July 9, viz: the approval of the bond and the signing of the citation were inoperative as against the petitioners for any purpose, whether those subsequent proceeding are to be considered independently, by themselves, or in connection with the previous proceedings, because,—

(a.) Considered independently, there was no petition of appeal and no allowance of appeal as against the petitioners, or any one else, and no citation or security to the petitioners. Neither was the record, nor were the petioners, brought here.

(b.) Considered in connection with the previous proceedings, the proceedings of July 9 limited the proceeding of June 16 to, and define it as, a proceeding between the appellants and Duncan and Elliott only. The recitals of the bond describe Duncan and Elliott as the only respondents on the appeal taken in court. The citation is addressed to Duncan and Elliot only, and describes them as sole respondents on the appeal taken in court.

(c.) It is, therefore, evident that there was no intention either in the proceedings which took place in court, on June 16, or in those which took place afterwards, to bring the petitioners here, and give them here an opportunity to be heard, and that they are not here, although an unqualified supersedeas as against them has been declared to exist by the learned circuit justice.

VI.—The bond given on behalf of the appellants is not available to the petitioners. It is a bond to Duncan and Elliot in their individual names. The appellants deny that they are trustees. If the bond is to be considered as one of the items of the trust fund in Duncan and Elliot's hands, as trustees, they can recover upon it only by showing a damage to the whole trust estate. But they cannot recover for damage sustained by the appellants themselves. The bond should have been made, either directly to the petitioners, or to Duncan and Elliot in trust for the petitioners.

VII.—The petitioners occupy a relation to the property in controversy, and to the litigation, which entitles them to prosecute the decree, and to be regularly brought here, and secured against damage, whenever it is sought by the appellants to review the decree and to stay its execution.

The petitioners were admitted as parties to the litigation, among other things, for the express purpose of prosecuting the claims of Alexander Duncan.

According to the recognized course of equity practice, in all cases of suits in rem, service of a subpœna is not the only method of making parties defendant to a suit. They may be brought in on their own petition or by availing themselves of a decree made for their benefit, or by purchasing an interest in the res, and when thus brought in, they are parties as effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if brought in by subpœna. The moment they place themselves, or are, by the action of the court, placed in such a relation to the suit that the decree binds them or their claim of interest, they are parties to the litigation.

Calvert on parties in Equity, pp. 55–66,
17 Law Library.
9 Peters, 483, Harrison vs. Nixon.
7 Paige, 585, Innes vs. Lansing.
2 Black., 539, Ogilvie v. Knox Ins. Co.
1 Wallace, 655, Blossom vs. R. R. Co.
6 Id., 186, Re Howard.

11 Id., 479, Galveston R. R. Co. v. Cowdrey.

VIII.—The facts that the appeal was taken in the name of D'Orelli Ziegler, without his authority, and that he has transferred his interest in the res and abandoned the appeal, vitiate it and all proceedings taken in support of it.

The other appellants proceeded jointly with Ziegler, not separately from him. But the unity of interest is now destroyed. It is not the same appeal which was, or appeared to be, originally taken. The sureties covenanted for the damages to be sustained from the joint appeal of Ziegler and his co-appellants; but there is now no such appeal, and the contract of the sureties has nothing to apply to. If it has, then the condition of the bond has already been broken; for Ziegler has elected not to prosecute the appeal to effect; and a stay should not be continued on the faith of a bond of which the condition is already broken.

IX.—The decree appealed from consists of two parts, one ordering a sale and the other decreeing a distribution of the proceeds. So far as it orders a sale, the decree is as much in favor of the appellants as of any one else. That is, all parties agree that there should be a sale. They differ only as to the extent of their respective interests in the proceeds. It is not a matter of right for the appellants to ask a supersedeas to so much of the decree as they united in asking for; they are entitled only to a stay in respect of that which they dissented from. The supersedeas is therefore too broad; it should be limited to the distribution of the proceeds on the coupons, and should not stay the sale. But as the petitioners offer to leave in court an equivalent for what may be distributed on the coupons, the stay should, in view and on the basis of that offer, be vacated unqualifiedly.

X.—The papers show that the security given is inadequate.

XI.—There are either two appeals pending, namely, one consisting of the proceedings in open court, on June 16th, and the other consisting of the proceedings out of court, on July 9th; or there is only one appeal pending, which consists of the proceedings of both those days taken together and in connection with each other.

If there are two appeals, the first was inoperative, because it was not perfected by the giving of any security, even for costs, at the time, and at all events no supersedeas was then effected. The second was inoperative as an appeal against the petitioners, because it was scrupulously limited and defined as an appeal against Duncan and Elliot only, and it was inoperative as a supersedeas against the petitioners, because no bond was given to them.

If there was only one appeal, it was inoperative as against the petitioners, because the proceedings in open court on June 16th, although in form embracing the petitioners, was subsequently, by the proceedings of July 9, defined, limited and reduced to an appeal in which Duncan and Elliot are the only respondents and the only obligees in the supersedeas bond.

And, whatever may be the number of appeals, each of them is vitiated by the want of authority to appeal in Ziegler's name, by his withdrawing from the appeals, by the insufficiency of the bond, by the fact that the appeal is from the whole of a decree obtained in part by the appellants, and by the inadequacy of the security.

XII.—The petitioners are entitled to have the supersedeas vacated either unqualifiedly or upon terms.

F. N. Bangs,
Of Counsel for Petitioners.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States.

W. B. DUNCAN AND A. F. ELLIOTT,
VS.
THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY
ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM,
VS.
THE SAME.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER, BERNARD DEWATTEVILLE,
ET AL.
VS.
THE SAME.

Consolidated Causes.

Answer to Petition, to Vacate Supersedeas, &c.

E. L. ANDREWS,
E. H. GRANDIN,
Solicitors for Appellants.

MORRISON & NATHAN,
Printers and Blank Book Manufacturers,
23 Dey Street, N. Y.

IN THE 1

Supreme Court of the United States.

W. BUTLER DUNCAN and A. FOSTER ELLIOTT.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM, 2

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER, BERNARD DE WATTEVILLE, HENRY JUMP and MASSON CHAVANNES,

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

To the Honorable the Supreme Court of the United States: 3

The answer of Morris Ketchum, Rudolph Merian, Eugene Renevier, Charles Carrard, Cephise Chuffart, Bernard de Watteville, Henry Jump and Masson Chavannes to the petition made herein by William H.

Hays, William S. Pierson and T. Haskins Dupuy, respectfully shows:

That the litigation for the enforcement of the liens of the first mortgage bonds of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company had proceeded for more than fifteen months when the cause was brought on for the final hearing.

That down to said time the said Hays, Dupuy and Pierson had not intervened or in any manner become parties to the said suits. At the time of the final argu-
4 ment they were admitted as nominal participants herein, but no relief was prayed or asked against them in any shape, even for costs.

That thereafter the several suits which had been pending, were by proper proceedings had duly consolidated, and a final decree was entered in the consolidated causes.

That an appeal from the said decree was prayed by the present appellants, representing six hundred thousand dollars of first mortgage bonds, in open court at 5 the same term and on the same day when the decree was entered, and the said prayer of appeal was duly entered on the minutes of the Court.

That the appeal so prayed for was granted by Mr. Justice Bradley and the Circuit Judge constituting the Court before which the proceedings for the consolidation of the above entitled suits had been had, and the said appeal was granted from the final decree in the consolidated cause, and was prayed for and allowed according to the position and arrangement of the vari-6 ous parties to the consolidated cause to become appellants and respondents.

That, upon information and belief, the appellants herein prayed, and argued through their counsel, that the amount of the supersedeas bond should not exceed ten thousand dollars, the property being and remaining in the custody of the Court.

That, upon information and belief, the largest sum which it was sought to have named at Circuit by any 7 of the parties to the litigation as a condition of super-seding the execution of the decree, was the amount of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, which it was sought to have imposed by W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliott, the present respondents in this cause.

And for further answer the above named parties respectfully show:

That in pursuance of the order of the Circuit Court these appellants had prepared a draft of the supersedeas bond and had the same submitted to the Circuit 8
Justice in the city of New York. Thereafter the bond, as corrected by the learned Justice, was executed and was by him approved, and was filed according to the order for the appeal herein.

Upon information derived from Special-Master Gillette, they further show that the Masters were served at the instance of the petitioners who are making the present application to the Supreme Court, with a notice of which the following is a true copy:

NOTICE TO SPECIAL MASTER.

U. S. CIRCUIT COURT, 9
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN and ANDREW FOSTER ELLIOTT, Trustees, &c.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET ALS.

MORRIS KETCHUM,

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET ALS.

Consolidated Causes.

10

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER, ET AL.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

To James Gillette and Thomas Herndon, Esquires, special masters appointed by the decree of June 15, 1877.

Gentlemen,—We are advised and instructed to inform you, that we do not regard the execution of the said decree, so far as it requires you to make a sale of the mortgaged property, as stayed or superseded by any of the proceedings heretofore taken in the nature
11 of an appeal by Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler and their co-appellants. No bond has been given on that appeal, except a bond to William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliott, in their individual names, and they are not, as individuals, parties to the litigation. No bond or security of any kind has been given to us, and no citation has been served upon us. As we are advised, the legal effect of the bond given is, at the utmost, to stay only the proceedings of Andrew Foster Elliott and William Butler Duncan as individnals. Under the circumstances we think it is your duty either to proceed to execute the decree, or to apply to the court for its instructions in the premises.

12 Dated New York, August 20, 1877.

Yours respectfully,
WILLIAM H. HAYS,
WILLIAM S. PIERSON,
T. HASKINS DUPUY,
By C. W. Bangs,
Their Solicitor.

Endorsed:
Received, New York, August 22, 1877.
James Gillette,
Special Master.
Saratoga Springs, N. Y., August 23, 1877.
A true copy:
James Gillette,
13 Special Master.

That on the receipt of this notice by the appellants they caused the Masters to be served with a counter notice of which the following is a copy:

NOTICE TO SPECIAL MASTER.

U. S. CIRCUIT COURT,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN and ANDREW FOSTER ELLIOTT, Trustees, &c.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET ALS.

MORRIS KETCHUM,

vs. 14

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET ALS.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER, ET AL.

vs.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

To JAMES GILLETTE and THOMAS H. HERNDON, Esquires, 15 special masters appointed by the decree of June 15, 1877.

Your official letter enclosing a copy of a notice in the above cause served on you is received.

The order of Mr. Justice Bradley for the appeal to Supreme Court contains the following words: "The said bond shall stay execution if approved and filed at any time within sixty days from the date of this order."

As the foregoing order of the Court has been complied with, and the bond approved by Mr. Justice Bradley, and filed within the time, it would seem un- 16 neccessary to add that you are not called upon in propriety to follow the suggestion made by counsel in the cause that you should disobey the order of the Circuit Court.

Should you, however, disregard the stay of execution ordered upon Judge Bradley's approval of the bond and not upon counsel's opinion of that approval, we should be forced to proceed as for a contempt.

In regard to applying to the Court for instructions, we may respectfully mention that the draft of the bond was submitted to Judge Bradley before execution.

The names of Hays, Dupuy and Pierson were specially objected to in the bond by Judge Bradley and under his direction and in his presence, if not by his own 17 hand stricken from the draft.

That draft with the interlineations and corrections in Judge Bradley's own handwriting is now in my possession and subject to your inspection.

If it were necessary in a document of this character, I could detail to you the remarks which Judge Bradley made in regard to the inappropriateness of inserting the names of Hays and others in the bond.

On the subject of the description of Duncan and Elliott it may be time enough to consider that when they make the objection. They are described as Trustees in the recital of the bond, though they are not named 18 as Trustees in the title of the decree.

But this suggestion is no more tenable than the one regarding the citing of parties, when the appeal is taken in open Court of the same term.

It is very apparent that the Masters should not allow themselves to be drawn into espousing matters of such a character.

If these parties are desirous to obtain the direction and have the instructions of the Court they are the proper ones to apply for them.

Yours respectfully,
E. L. ANDREWS.

19 That thereafter the following letter was received by the solicitor for the appellants from the Masters herein.

LAKE GEORGE, N. Y.
Sept. 1st, 1877.

E. L. ANDREWS, ESQ.,

Dear Sir—Referring to the notice of C. W. Bangs, solicitor of Com. on Re-organization, looking to a sale of the M. & O. R. R., and to the counter notice rec'd from you, we have agreed that it would be prudent to apply to Mr. Justice Bradley for instructions, and will forward the papers with an application.

20 Respectfully,
JAMES GILLETTE,
THOMAS H. HERNDON,
pr G. Masters.

That on or about the 15th of September the following opinion of Mr. Justice Bradley was filed in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of Alabama:

STOWE, VT., SEPT. 11, 1877. 21

Messrs. JAMES GILLETTE and THOMAS H. HERNDON:

Gentlemen—Your letter of the 5th inst. has been received, enclosing copy of notice from solicitor of Wm. H. Hays and others, suggesting that it is your duty to proceed to execute the decree for sale of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, made in the cases of Wm. B. Duncan and Andrew F. Elliott against the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company & al., Morris Ketchum against said company & al., and D'Orelli Ziegler & al., against said company and others, notwithstanding the appeal taken in the cases as consolidated. 22

The suits were consolidated and treated as one, one decree was made thereon, and appeal taken in open court, and the appellants desired to give an appeal bond satisfactory to the Court to stay execution. The bond presented was approved for that purpose. If it is defective for want of form, I should certainly feel bound, under the circumstances, to allow the appellants to file another bond. At all events, until the Court orders otherwise, it seems to me that the Masters should not take it upon themselves to decide that the appeal bond is ineffective. Of course, I am willing to 23 hear any application on the subject, that can properly be decided at Chambers. But it seems to me that it is hardly necessary for the Masters to go to that trouble. If the parties are dissatisfied with the bond, it is rather for them to make application to the Court, or a judge at chambers, to direct the Masters to proceed, notwithstanding the appeal.

Yours truly,

(Signed) JOSEPH P. BRADLEY.

A true copy:

JAMES GILLETTE, Master.

That the real position of W. H. Hays, W. S. Pierson and T. H. Dupuy, in reference to this litigation, is as 24 follows:

No relief was asked against them, nor was any relief asked by them; they were admitted as merely nominal parties. After the appeal and supersedeas had been perfected for nearly thirty days they, for the first time, claimed to become parties to the appeal, and were admitted by the Circuit Justice as appellants in the consolidated cause. Their notice of appeal, seeking to reverse the decree herein, as served upon the solicitor of these appellants, is as follows:

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

25

WILLIAM BUTLER DUNCAN and ANDREW FOSTER ELLIOTT, Trustees, &c.
vs.
THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM,
vs.
THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER, ET AL.,
vs.
26 THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

Consolidated Causes.

Please to take notice that William H. Hays, William S. Pierson, T. H skins Dupuy and Alexander Duncan, parties to the consolidated cause, claim an appeal and hereby appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, from so much of the decree made in the above entitled cause and causes on June 15, 1877, as overruled the exceptions taken by them or either of them to the Master's report and reports; and also from as much of the said decree as ordered and adjudged that the first mortgage bonds therein mentioned are secured 27 equally with the coupons which became due on the first day of May and November, 1874, and are to be rateably paid from the proceeds of the property without priority or preference to said coupons, and the interest therein; and also from so much of said decree as omitted to order and adjudge that the holders of said coupons are up to the amount of said coupons and interest thereon, entitled to the proceeds of said property before any of such proceeds are applied to the payment of any subsequently maturing coupons, or to the payment of any part of the principal of said bonds; and also from so much of said decree as orders, adjudges or decrees that any coupon which matured after November 1, 1874, or that any bond be received by the Masters in payment from the highest and last bidder, 28

without providing that such highest and last bidder shall first pay in to the Masters an amount sufficient to satisfy in full the said coupons which matured on May 1, 1874, and November 1, 1874, respectively, with the interest thereon, or without providing that the Masters should allow to the highest and last bidder against his bid the amount of such last mentioned coupons and the interest thereon, so far as such coupons should be held by such bidder and should be produced and delivered to the Master for cancellation in the order of their maturity, and also from so much of said decree as omitted to order and adjudge that the funds remaining in the hands of the Receivers should be applied to the 29 payment of the coupons secured by said first mortgage and the interest on such coupons according to the order of the maturity of such coupons.

Dated August 13th, 1877.

C. W. Bangs,
Solicitor for Appellants.

To N. W. Trimble, Esq.,
Clerk, &c.

To E. L. Andrews, Esq.,
Solicitor for Morris Ketchum, D'Orelli Ziegler, Masson Chavannes, Henry Jump, Berdard de Watteville, Cephise Chuffart, Ru- 30
dolph Merian, Eugene Reneirer, Alfred Reneirer, Charles Carrard, Louis J. Belloni.

George N. Stewart, Esq.,
Solicitor for the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company.

William Jones, Esq., and E. H. Granden, Esq.,
Solicitors for second mortgage trustees and al.

P. & T. A. Hamilton, Esqs.,
Solicitors for William Butler Duncan and Andrew Foster Elliott, Trustees, &c.

31 That these appellants have been cited to appear in the Supreme Court at the said appeal of Hays, Dupuy and Piersou, who seek to overturn the decree herein as avowed by them but which decree they now seek by their present petition to have executed.

And in the claim of appeal of the said Hays, Dupuy and Pierson to this Honorable Court it is prayed "that the said Supreme Court of the United States will proceed to hear the cause, and that the said decree of the said Circuit Court may be modified, amended or re-32 versed as justice to these appellants may require in the respects and as to the matters aforesaid, and that such further or other decree may be made as to the said Supreme Court may seem just." The matter in respect of which the said Hays, Dupuy and Pierson claim that the decree of the Circuit Court is erroneous is one of the same matters in respect of which these appellants claim that error exists.

And for further answer to this petition these respondents show, upon information and belief: That 33 the said Hays, Dupuy and Pierson are not the owners of the amount of bonds which they allege themselves to be the owners of in their petition to this Court. Their ownership of first mortgage bonds is only as follows:

T. Haskins Dupuy, 6 bonds.
W. H. Hays, 75 bonds.
W. S. Pierson, none proven.

The balance of the large amount of bonds of which they claim to be owners, are really owned by a numerous body of persons in various parts of Europe and this country, and the powers of attorney which the said
34 Hays, Dupuy and Pierson hold, relate principally to an amicable readjustment of the debts of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company, which reorganization has failed by its own terms, and by reason of the non-assent of the large number of first mortgage bondholders who have been represented in the record herein to the extent of six hundred thousand dollars, and also by reason of the dissent of more than three hundred thousand dollars of second mortgage bonds, who have likewise been represented on the record herein by the cor-
35 poration known as the Rogers Locomotive Works, and by others.

The remaining powers of the said Hays, Dupuy and Pierson relate to the purchase of the railroad and property when the same may be sold. The position of the owners of the first mortgage bonds who have given these powers, is expressed in the following communications from some of their number: 36

26th March, 1877.

To the Register of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Fifth Judicial Circuit and Southern District of Alabama, for the consideration of his Honor, the Judge of said Court:

Sir,—I respectfully beg to state for the information of the Court and all concerned—

1st. That I received a circular dated Mobile, Ala., June 20th, from James Gillette, Special Master, asking me to send proof of my claim, and particulars against the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company. 37

2d. I received this circular in Ballymena, Ireland, on the 4th of July, 1876. I sent proof made before a U. S. Consul, on 6th of July, 1876, addressed to T. Haskins Dupuy, Vice-President, Mobile.

3d. I signed a form of reorganization drawn up by Mr. Dupuy.

4th. I was asked again, in November, 1876, to sign an agreement come to on 1st of October, 1876. I replied to C. M. Lampson & Co., London, on the 22d of January, as follows:

Ballymena, 22d Jan., 1877. 38

Gentlemen,—I sent my claim duly authenticated by the American Consul to Mr. Dupuy, on the 6th July, last year; and as he is one of the managers of the 1st of October, '76 agreement, I don't see the necessity of doing more until the Court shall have prescribed or approved a further step.

Yours respectfully,

JOHN LYNCH.

I hope the foregoing will place me under the protection of the Court. If not I would of course do as directed by the Court.

5th. My broker, Josias Cunningham, Belfast, writes me—Belfast, 9th March, 1877. Dear Sir,—With reference 39 to our former circular in re Mobile and Ohio Railroad securities, we forwarded Messrs. Lampson & Co., for a number of parties, consent forms signed and endorsed as follows: The parties signing do so on the express condition of their being free from any claim, liability, or responsibility in cash, or beyond the proportion of expense incurred in the arrangement to be deducted from the securities issued in exchange for their respective holdings.

I see an article in a Belfast newspaper this morning, which taken in connection with a sort of threat in the 40 October agreement, to the effect that persons unable to comply with all its requirements will be deprived of the benefits derivable from its acceptance by the Court, is somewhat startling. I confess I do not fully comprehend the whole case, and, therefore, humbly ask the protection of the Court, if I have failed in any essential particular unwittingly.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Yours respectfully,
JOHN LYNCH.

I send the newspaper alluded to above.

Protest made by Messrs. Amy & Co.

41 The following amply describes the true position of the bondholders before the Courts:

In that branch of the Mobile & Ohio litigation being the suits brought in the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Southern District of Alabama, Mr. Justice Bradley pronounced an opinion containing, among others, the following language:

"Looking at the difficulties which beset the subject on every side, we think that if we allow the non-subscribing bondholders to participate in the purchase of the property, should it be made in behalf of the reorganizing combination, on an equal footing with those 42 who have joined it, that we shall have done all that we can do under the circumstances to protect their interests.
The parties representing the reconstruction scheme, through their counsel, have offered to allow them to come in, and to extend the time for doing so until the first of August. We suggest that this time should be extended to the day of sale of the property. We perceive that the trustees have the power to do this—and keep the agreement on foot by extending the time sixty days at a time. We have, therefore, proposed an additional proviso to the decree to carry out this view. We hope that it will be acceded to by the counsel for the 43 complainants and those representing the reconstruction scheme. We do not wish to dictate these terms to the parties who propose to purchase, but suggest that, in our judgment, the interest of all parties would be subserved by an arrangement of this sort."

On the suggestion of counsel for Messrs. Duncan & Elliott, parties to said causes, who stated that it was very desirable if the plan of reconstruction should be generally adopted to avoid any sale at all, and who proposed to extend the time for bondholders to come to an 44 arrangement to and including the 1st of September, 1877, a decree was subsequently made by the said
Court, containing among others, the following paragraph:

7. The court orders and decrees that the Masters may receive in payment from the highest and last bidder, bonds and coupons which form a part of the first mortgage debt ascertained to be due or owing by the Master in his report, and sustained by the opinion of this court; provided, however, that a sum sufficient to pay the costs, charges and expenses of the trust as above mentioned, whether exceeding the said cash deposit 45 or not, and also to provide for the payment of the pro rata dividend which shall be due or owing to the owners of other bonds and coupons, secured under the deed of trust, must be paid in money, and provided also that if the said mortgage property shall be bid off directly or indirectly by, for, or in behalf of the bondholders and creditors who have, or shall have, entered into and subscribed the agreement for the readjustment of the securities of said Company, dated October 1, 1876, commonly called the agreement of re-organization, then and in that case all and every bondholder and creditor of said Company not having already 46 entered into and subscribed said agreement, who shall, on or before the first day of September next, enter into and subscribe the same and deposit their securities with the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in the City of New York, or with the Bank of Mobile in the City of Mobile, as provided by said agreement, shall be and they are hereby allowed to participate in said bid and purchase on the same terms and on an equal footing in all respects, according to the character of their claims respectively, with the said bondholders and creditors who have heretofore entered into and signed said agreement. 47

It is evident from the above, that the limitation prescribed was upon the theory held out to the Court of an amicable re-organization without the sale.

Subsequently an appeal was taken from that drceree, and the whole thereof to the Supreme Court of the United States, which appeal is still pending and undetermined, and a bond was filed by the appellants to prevent a sale under the decree appealed from until the determination on such appeal. The same equitable reasons which influenced the Court to pronounce the above opinion in protection of the minority on the bidding for the property at any sale to be had under the decree, continued to operate after the appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

As you are aware, another branch of the litigation was at the time of the rendition of the above-mentioned 48 decree pending in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee, and in the suits such proceedings were had as to present the questions respecting the validity of the so called Tennessee substitution bonds, and the rights of the holders thereof to a priority of lien as against the first mortgage sterling bondholders. At the time of the rendition of the first mentioned decree, the causes pending in Tennessee had not been brought to a hearing on those questions, but it is apparent from other passages in the said decree, notably, the ninth clause, that the Circuit 49 Court in Alabama believed that the existence or nonexistence of a prior lien for nearly two million dollars on one hundred and eighteen miles of road in Tennessee would be determined prior to the 1st day of September, 1877. The cause in Tennessee has been heard, but no decision has as yet been rendered; it is, therefore, palpably unjust that the first mortgage sterling bondholders should be compelled to submit to a scheme which is not predicated upon a judicial determination of the before mentioned questions, but is at variance with the sterling bondholders' rights as asserted in said suits, or, indeed, to any scheme at any time prior to 50 the day of the sale of the entire road, after the priorities and extent of the various liens shall have been finally determined. Acting, however, according to the measure of our relations to our European constituents, we surrender, under protest, the bonds enumerated in the schedule this day left by us with you, and give, under protest, the prescribed power of attorney, continuing, however, to do as you are doing to maintain our interests in the prosecution of an appeal and other litigations, involving questions of the utmost importance to the real parties in interest, without any reference to these provisional arrangements, reserving unto ourselves and those whom we represent, the right to revoke 51 the powers given, and to require the return of the bonds aforesaid, or to otherwise act as may seem expedient in either of the following events:

First. In case the United States Supreme Court should decide against the claim of priority set up for Alexander Duncan's coupons by yourselves, or Messrs. Duncan and Elliott.

Second. In case the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee, should decide against the priority of the Tennessee substitution bonds.

And lastly. In case the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee should 52 decide in favor of the priority of the Tennessee substitution bonds, and on appeal from such decision, the Supreme Court of the United States should reverse the same.

Respectfully,
(Signed,) H. AMY & CO.

Dated New York, Sept. 1st, 1877.
To Messrs. HAYS, DUPUY and PIERSON,
N. Y. Cy.

That the form of power of attorney given to said Hays, Dupuy and Pierson, and which is included in 53 the record of this cause in the Supreme Court, does not authorize the stipulation contained in this petition, whereby it is sought to place the said coupons of Alexander Duncan in a position paramount to the lien of the first mortgage bondholders. It also appears from the said form of power, as well as from the foregoing protests, that the owners of the first mortgage bonds did not yield any of their rights in the Courts by joining in a prospective scheme for purchasing the road 54 when it should be offered for sale.

The said Hays, Dupuy and Pierson hold powers from a much larger proportion of the Tennessee substitution bonds, which are contested claims, and of second mortgage convertible and consolidated bonds, which are inferior claims, than they hold of the first mortgage bonds.

These respondents further show:

That the stipulation contained in the petition herein, whereby Hays, Dupuy and Pierson purport on behalf of a large amount of bonds "to adopt and approve the 55 acts and doings of Duncan and Elliott as trustees," is wholly unwarranted by the powers given by some of the bondholders to them. Morris Ketchum in his capacity as trustee represents the entire first mortgage interest in the road, and he submits that, besides those who have not joined in the plans for purchasing the road when it is finally sold, he has been requested by holders of bonds to a very large amount, who have given powers of purchase to said Hays, Dupuy and Pierson, to enforce their legal rights before the Courts.

56 And for further answer these respondents show:

That they do not know, nor have they any means of ascertaining, what price the Mobile & Ohio Railroad and appurtenant property would bring at a foreclosure sale. They submit that the calculations in that behalf made by the petitioners are wholly uncertain, and, in fact, the price which such an estate would bring, is impossible of ascertainment.

They submit to the Court that the security upon which they loaned their money was a land grant from 57 the United States, and a railroad property extending nearly five hundred miles. The appeal which they have taken is not alone from the portions of the decree in relation to Alexander Duncan's coupons, but likewise in respect of other grave errors therein by which they deem that their rights are seriously affected. They submit that they have filed their bond for stay of execution under the statutes of the United States, and under the orders of the Circuit Court, and in case any 58 defect in the form of said bond as approved should be discovered, though they believe none to exist, they are willing to file a bond in such form as may be deemed proper by this Court. They submit that they should not be deprived of the security of the trust estate and be compelled to accept some personal bond which may prove insecure or be the subject of some future litigation.
They further submit that, the amount of the supersedeas bond as fixed by the Court that heard the cause should not be increased. Nothing is stated in the petition for such increase which was not fully discussed 59 before the Circuit Court at the time the amount of the bond was determined upon.

That as matter of fact, the pendency of this appeal with the supersedeas is not a cause of damage to the property, nor does it delay or embarrass its improvement. On the contrary, several hundred thousand dollars per annum have been expended under the orders of the Court out of the earnings for the improvement of the railroad. It is alleged in the bill of Duncan and Elliott that previous to the 60 placing of the road in the hands of the Court, large amounts of its assets had been expended for the benefit of subordinate claims. Since the Court has taken the custody of the property, no efforts which have been made to secure the appropriation of the earnings of the property to the benefit of floating creditors have been successful, but on the contrary, such efforts as have been made have been in most instances defeated. By reason of the appropriation of the net earnings to betterments the road and entire property is notoriously in 61 a better condition than for some years past. It is entirely incorrect to say that the prevention of a sale interferes with the condition and improvement of the property.

Respondents further show:

That Alexander Duncan who is named in the motion papers herein, as an appellee, and Louis J. Belloni who is named in the appeal papers of Hays, Dupuy and Pierson as an appellee, are neither of them parties of record in this litigation as these affiants are in- 62 formed and believed.

And these respondents further show: That they have offered to submit this appeal on printed arguments at the commencement of the present term of the Supreme Court, but the said offer has not been accepted by the petitioners.

Wherefore these appellants pray that the motions for the vacatur of the supersedeas, the dismissal of the the appeal and the other motions contained in the petition may be denied and overruled with costs. 63

And the respondents herein will ever pray, &c.

MORRIS KETCHUM,
BERNARD DE WATTEVILLE,
HENRY JUMP,
MASSON CHAVANNES,
RODOLPH MERIAN,
EUGENE RENEVIER,
CHARLES CARRARD,
CEPHISE CHUFFART.
By E. L. ANDREWS,
64 E. H. GRANDIN,
Their Solicitors.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, }
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK. } ss.

Charles Moran, D. Comyn Moran, Amedee D. Moran, and Morris Ketchum being duly and severally sworn, do depose and say, and each for himself says:

That he has read the foregoing petition and knows the contents thereof, and that the same is true of his own knowledge, except to the matters and things there-65 in stated upon information and belief, and as to those matters he believes it to be true.

That Morris Ketchum is one of the appellants in the above cause before this Court; and that the firm of Moran Brothers, composed of the above named affiants except Morris Ketchum, are the attorneys in fact and agents herein of the other appellants before this Court, and this verification is made by them because said appellants are aliens and are resident in Europe.

MORRIS KETCHUM.

Sworn to before me, this 11th }
day of October, 1877, }
66 EDWARD L. OWENS,
U. S. Commissioner,
Southern District of New York.

CHS. MORAN,
D. COMYN MORAN,
A. D. MORAN.

Sworn to before me, this 12th }
day of October, 1877, }
EDWARD L. OWENS,
U. S. Commissioner,
Southern District of New York.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States.

W. B. DUNCAN AND A. F. ELLIOTT,
VS.
THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY
ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM,
VS.
THE SAME.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER, BERNARD DEWATTEVILLE,
ET AL.
VS.
THE SAME.

Consolidated Causes.

Brief in Opposition. On motion to Vacate Supersedeas, &c.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. H. GRANDIN,
E. L. ANDREWS,
of Counsel.

MORRISON & NATHAN,
Printers and Blank Book Manufacturers,
23 Dey Street, N. Y.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States.

W. B. DUNCAN, ET AL.,

VS.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

MORRIS KETCHUM,

VS.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

D'ORELLI ZIEGLER, BERNARD DE WATTEVILLE, ET AL.,

VS.

THE MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, ET AL.

BRIEF.

ON MOTION TO VACATE SUPERSEDEAS.

FACTS.

The appeal to the Supreme Court was granted at the same term at which the decree was rendered. The order of the Circuit Court provided as follows:

"The supersedeas bond is hereby fixed at one hundred thousand dollars with sureties resident in the city of New York, who may unite in said bond in any proportionate sums. The said bond shall stay execution if approved and filed at any time within sixty days.

The draft of the bond was submitted to one of the Justices of the Supreme Court, and after being corrected by him, as fully shown by the answer to the petition, was executed and duly approved and filed, whereupon execution became stayed by the order of the Circuit Court.

Thereafter the moving parties in the present application likewise obtained an allocatur of appeal from the same Justice, and served citations and gave an appeal bond, seeking to obtain a reversal of the same decree from which these appellants had appealed.

Having waited for the lapse of more than sixty days after the entry of the decree, these petitioners who had themselves become appellants, served the Masters with a request to execute the decree upon the ground that they (the petitioners), had discovered a defect in the form of the bond given by these appellants. The Masters applied to one of the Justices of this Court for instructions, and the decision upon that application is set out in extenso in our answering papers.

The present application, "That any supersedeas or stay of execution heretofore granted as against your petitioners may be vacated and set aside, and leave given to your petitioners to prosecute and enforce the said decree notwithstanding said appeal in open Court," is made upon the same grounds that were presented to Mr. Justice Bradley, namely: That Hays, Dupuy and Pierson are not named as obligees in the supersedeas bond.

The only pleading in the litigations which asserts any affirmative relief in favor of Alexander Duncan's coupons, is the bill filed by W. B. Duncan and A. F. Elliott. In that bill, those coupons are claimed to hold an equal rank with the first mortgage bonds. The decision and decree of the Circuit Court was in favor of the claim set up by those complainants, and accorded with their views of the position of the Duncan coupons. They were the successful parties below, and are the proper parties to resist an appeal against the decree rendered in accord with the prayers of their bill.

Hays, Dupuy and Pierson came before the Circuit Court as representatives for parties in interest in various classes of claims, and without any allegation on their part of any misconduct by the trustees, they were admitted pro interesse suo. No relief was asked against or by them; they were mere nominal parties.

They filed no cross bill for any decree on their behalf against any of the parties to the litigation, either complainant or co-defendant.

But thereafter all the causes pending in reference to the foreclosure of the first mortgage on the railroad were consolidated by an order which took no note of Hays, Dupuy and Pierson.

On the final hearing Hays, Dupuy and Pierson contended that the Duncan coupons were in all respects prior and paramount to the first mortgage bonds. Their claim was entirely defeated and the decree went against them, and as above stated they have since appealed from that adverse decision.

When the supersedeas bond was submitted to the learned justice, then, for the first time, there came up for practical determination the position of parties appellant and respondent under the consolidation of the causes.

The bond was properly required to be given by the obligors to the successful parties below, who were Duncan and Elliott and they alone.

POINTS.

FIRST.

Supersedeas bonds should run only to parties adverse to the appeal, whose position in relation to the subject of the appeal is in conflict with the reversal of the decree. How can this be predicated of these petitioners who opposed the decree at Circuit, and are themselves appellants therefrom in this Court? There would have been an anomaly in making them who seek a reversal obligees in a bond to be given to those who are opposed to a reversal. What an inconsistency it would have been to indemnify those against the damages arising from securing a reversal who are likewise clamoring for the same result.

This Court has clearly laid down the doctrine which should control the question at bar.

The Act of 1789 directs "the adverse party to be cited on a writ of error or appeal."

"The adverse party is the one which appeared in the suit and who prosecuted or defended it, and in whose favor the judgment was rendered which the plaintiff in the writ of error seeks to reverse.

Motion to dismiss appeal overruled.

Poydras v. Treasurer, 17 Howard's Supreme Court Reports, page 3.

Thompson v. Ellsworth, 1 Barbour's Ch. Rep. p. 627.

Potter v. Baker, 4 Paige, 29.

Succession of Montgomery, 2 La. Am. 469.

Barner v. Gorden, 16 La. Am. 324.

The Mabey and Cooper, 14 Wall, p. 215.

SECOND.

Nominal parties below should not be joined on the appellate proceedings. The mere attorneys of some of the bondholders to act as a purchasing agency to buy the road when sold, cannot be considered in any other light.

When parties are allowed to intervene pro interesse suo, no relief being demanded by or against them, they do not thereby become indispensable parties to the appeal bond.

They may themselves become appellants, as they have done in this case. But the admission of parties representing a dozen classes of cestuis que trusts pro interesse suo, would not entitle them all to be joined in the appeal bond. They are admitted to represent their own interests, but this is very far from implying that the position of the trustees of record as the proper parties to represent the general body of the cestuis que trust in the ultimate course of the proceedings is in any wise impaired. This is particularly the case when the intervenors are defeated.

McBurnett v. Breed, 6 Ala. 476.
Cooper v. Maclin, 25 Ala. 298.
Deslonda v. Carter, 28 Ala. 541.
Duncan v. Taylor, 33 Georgia, 312.
Brewster v. Wakefield, 22 Howard, 118.
Hilliard on New Trials, p. 747.
Duncan v. Holt, 21 La. An. 235.
Exparte Cutting, 4 Otto, p. 22.

The consolidation of the causes took place subsequently to all changes in the parties to the individual suits. Beyond the necessary and proper parties, the mortgagor and the various trustees, the record was to be moulded by the Court in the consolidated cause. This was done by the several allocaturs of appeal. The bond was given by the first appellants, our clients, according to the allocatur of the Judge under whose direction the causes were consolidated.

The petitioners on this motion became parties to the appellate proceedings for the first time when the Justice granted them an allowance of appeal.

Even a proper party to an appeal is not a necessary party to the bond.

Brockett v. Brockett, 2 Howard, 238.

It seems to have been the former practice to have the bond run to the Clerk of the Court.

Bank of Alexandria v. Swan, 9 Peters, p. 34.
See Moore v. Jackson, 35 Indiana, 361.
Robinson v. Bryan, 12 Iredell, L. R. 183.

These petitioners were not such adverse parties to the reversal of the decree as would have justified the appellants in making them respondents to the appeal, and recovering costs against them, when they had opposed the decree below, and are also seeking to reverse it. They could have had the appeal dismissed as against them.

THIRD.

Duncan and Elliott, Trustees, were the proper and sole parties to whom the bond should run. In case of an affirmance, they would be the only appropriate parties to recover on the penalties of the bond—they would sue for the entire body of first mortgage bondholders, and their recovery would be for the benefit of that entire constituency.

Even if Hays, Dnpuy and Pierson were first mortgage bondholders pure and simple, who had been allowed to inject themselves into the record, what propriety would there be in their assigning breaches on the bond, when their trustees, Duncan and Elliott could assign breaches for the whole body of bondholders, them included?

How could they join with Duncan and Elliott in a suit on the bond, and what would be the respective measures of damage, when they aver that they are aggrieved by the decree, and Duncan and Elliott are aggrieved by the reversal.

But the incongruity is made more apparent when it is noted that these applicants claim to represent nearly every species of incumbrance or claim on the trust estate, conceded to be inferior to the first mortgage lien of the appellants. Are subordinate lienholders to recover on account of the reversal of a decree which forecloses their equities? (Brensler v. Wakefield, 22 Howard, 118.) Can they be considered, in any sense, adverse to the reversal of the decree? Moreover, these moving parties, with such a constituency, seek to be specially secured against the reversal of a decree which they claim to be erroneous, by which they are themselves aggrieved, and which they are endeavoring to have corrected and reversed. They are in any event estopped on this motion by their own appeal.

FOURTH.

The petitioners are not entitled to enforce the decree, either with or without a supersedeas, and no leave should be granted them for that purpose. In all the proceedings below, they have not asked for any affirmative relief—they stand merely on the defensive, not having filed a cross bill or even asked for leave to do so.

What have they to do with the enforcement of a decree in favor of other parties on the record granted against their prayers, and from which they are appealing?

Duncan and Elliott obtained the relief which has been decreed. They filed the only bill that prayed for it; it is their decree. They are alone entitled to its enforcement and they are indisputably stayed.

The Court refused to interfere at the instance of the vast majority of the bondholders with the discretion of trustees holding a decree for the common benefit of various cestuis que trust, to order its enforcement. This is an attempt to attain that result by an indirect method.

Farmers' Loan and Trust Company vs.
The Iowa Central Railroad Company,
Central Law Journal, July 20, 1877.

The Supreme Court is moved virtually to declare that these petitioners are entitled to be relieved from a stay and to have leave given them to prosecute the decree.

They are not stayed now ; it was not intended to stay them because defendants putting in an answer pro interesse suo, do not thereby become entitled to execute a decree overruling their defenses.

As to giving them special leave to enforce the decree on their own account, though the complainants who procured it are stayed, the late decision (supra) seems to meet that application.

It is a proposal to award a precedendo in favor of defeated and appealing parties.

FIFTH.

The power to determine that the bond is good and sufficient is vested in the Circuit Court.

This Court will not interfere with that discretion in taking the bond—except where the matters have arisen after the cause became located in the Supreme Court.

Section 1000, R. S.
Jerome v. McCarter, 21 Wall.
Martin v. Hazard Powder Co., 3 Otto, p. 302.

SIXTH.

If the form of the bond be defective, it may be amended by order of the Court.

Powell on Appellat's Proceedings, 371.
Hilliard on New Trials, 740.
Robeson v. Lewis, 64 N. C. 734.
McDonald v. Bradley, 8 Iredell, 72.
Patty v. Winchester, 20 Ill. 261.
Hargis v. Praree, 7 Bush. 234.
Saterley v. Stevens, 11 Ohio, 420.
U. S. Revised Statutes, sec. 1005.

SEVENTH.

By virtue of the Statutes a new bond may be given after sixty days from the rendition of judgment "with permission of a justice or judge of the Appellate Court."

It may be respectfully added that the Court will always relieve from the effect of an inadvertence, if any there be, of a judicial officer.

Shiff v. Brownell, 4 Wis. 285.
Perry v. Wilson, 7 Mass. 394.
Sage v. Railroad Co. 3 Otto.

EIGHTH.

The appeal was prayed and granted in open Court at the same term and on the same day at which the decree was rendered.

No citation whatever was requisite.

Dayton v. Lash, 4 Otto, 117.

NINTH.

These petitioners claiming not to be parties to the appeal, are not competent to make this motion.

Blane v. Podgers, 47 Cal. p. 606.
Randolph v. Barbour, 6 Wheaton, 168.

TENTH.

Motion involving question of proper parties to the appeal should be adjourned to hearing. (Day v. Washburn, 23 Howard, p. 309.)

This motion to vacate the supersedeas should be denied, as there is no defect in the form of the bond.

ON MOTION TO VACATE SUPERSEDEAS BY THE APPELLEES GIVING A PERSONAL BOND.

No power exists in this Court to abrogate a supersedeas in the way proposed.

The Revised Statutes would seem to be a sufficient answer to the application.

Section 1007.

The Supreme Court has held that the power of superseding of decrees in equity in the Federal system is now derived from the statutes.

Slaughter House Cases, 10 Wallace.
Goddard v. Ordway, 4 Otto, 677.

It is such a clear legal right that this Court will grant a mandamus to compel the issuance of a supersedeas.

There can be no dispensing power to avoid the rights conferred on appellants by compliance with the law.

ON MOTION TO INCREASE SUPERSEDEAS BOND.

It appears from the opinion of the Circuit Court that the matters alleged in the petition for an increase of the amount of the bond were fully considered by that Court. The highest amount then applied for was one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Half a million dollars is now sought to be imposed without even an allegation that the circumstances have changed since the security was fixed by the trial Court. The answering papers show that the property is benefitted instead of injured, while in the custody of the Court.

This Court has decided that it will not review the action of the Circuit Court in regard to the amount of supersedeas bond, under the above circumstances.

Martin v. Hazard Powder Co., 3 Otto, p. 302.

The prayers of the petition should be denied.

GEORGE HOADLY,
E. L. ANDREWS,
E. H. GRANDIN,
P. PHILLIPS,
of Counsel.

Herron Dep 1858-57

Ketchum vs Duncan –